Who Holds the Exempt Jobs?
Here's Entire List for NYC

WHO holds the exempt jobs in New York City public life? Who are the exalted Democrats and Republicans together with the men who pay the bills — the taxpayers — the man who pays the bill — the tax- payer? For the Civil Service Employees Association, he can succeed in having legislation passed which will provide for accurate job evaluation, the State Civil Service Employees Association, the Board of Directors named a 15-man nominating committee to sit for State-wide office and for the executive committee of the State Division, Francis C. Mather, a board member, succeeded in having the names of four paid positions on the nominating committee, after a spirited discussion of the make-up of this committee, John P. Fows, CSEA president, immediately dispatched a memorandum to the newly-elected committee to meet this week in Albany, organize and select its initial committee. Those named to the nominating committee are:

For the County Division:

- Joseph Williams, Greene County
- Samuel Borelly, Onondaga
- E. Armstrong, Suffolk

For the State Division:

- Francis C. Mather, Law
- Henry Sheinin, Unemployment Insurance
- Charles Moehr, Mental Hygiene
- William P. Sullivan, Juvenile Delinquency
- Kenneth Ward, Corrections
- Norrie F. McDowell, Corrections
- Margaret A. Maloney, Public Service

The entire group will act upon nominations for State-wide office — president, five vice-presidents, secretary, treasurer. The State employees will act as the nominating committee for State departmental representatives.

For each State-wide office, two candidates must be chosen, according to the Association's constitution and by-laws.

Indications are that this year's election will be a hotly-contested one, as CSEA members are already in the field — although there has been no public, official announcement yet by any of them.

ALBANY, June 21 — The first payroll deductions under the new State employee hospitalization insurance program are expected on checks issued for the last half of July. About 27,000 State employees have signed up for the program since it went into effect a few days ago. Deductions are being made in cooperation with the Association.
Looking Inside

By H. J. LEARNARD

IN THE MOST RECENT pay increase requests by employees, the Federal government, and the New York State government, and even the NYC government, did not argue that there was a raise, but there was no money with which to finance it. The Federal raise is still in the holding pattern, and even the State raise has been granted, and a reclassification to eliminate inequities is under way. In NYC the raise was small, but a reclassification is offered as a hope of bigger and better results in the years to come.

The argument that there just isn't any money for a raise, however much the raise is desired, used to hold water. No longer. It was made by the Post Office for a reclassification, Poirot H. Laugeont, when he was Mayor of NYC, used the argument effectively. If he were Mayor today he would not get away with it. Employee organizations are more strident, more demanding, and the argument was falisious from the start. Government, as an employer, seemed to think that it was all right to hold all obligations imposed on any employer, to pay his workers what they are worth, in terms of the burning power of the day's dollar.

The problem with which public officials are faced today is to establish the fair rate of wages and see that enough money is raised through taxes, and incidental sources of revenue, to meet the basic obligations, both current and future, of the massive government. It used to be easy to say, "But where is the money coming from?" Now officials realize that, and they alone, have the responsibility of assuring that, which does not mean for public office, one of the implied obligations was that, if elected, they would not constitute the employers. Mayor Wagner was re-elected to recognize that responsibility, although an enforced realization, is one of the significant civil service improvements of recent years.

Post officials have not been brought up to par, and probably will not be, in any short-term effort. Even the modest 7 percent raise for postal workers, as recommended by the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee, was probably vetoed by President Eisenhower, if it passes the Congress, Postmaster General Arthur Summerill, an employee, said that raise was a submerged group. The realization of that responsibility, Mayor Wagner, to pay his workers what they are worth, in terms of the buying power for postal workers, as recommended by the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee, was vetoed by Eisenhower, if it passes the Congress, Postmaster General Arthur Summerill, an employee, said that raise was.

The other Federal workers involved in large-group pay legislation, the so-called classified employees, would get less than the postal workers, at least one may be certain.

Despite the insufficiency of what appears likely to be enacted, a Federal administration intent on showing a record of marked improvements, has not squelched the idea with a plea of insufficiency of funds. In the State government, it is impossible to say what the result will be, pending another session of the legislature at which time, the act of March 3, 1879, may be enacted. The personnel director can get along with a budget plus the powers plus the powers that have been increased, and the 7 percent provision, substituted, but what he says indicates the obstacles that confront even a small raise.

The other Federal workers involved in large-group pay legislation, the so-called classified employees, would get less than the postal workers, at least one may be certain.

A State employee played an all-important but behind-the-scenes role in Albany's nationally publicized Cradle of the Union celebration which began June 20 and continued through June 27.

Top man behind the celebrations, which won recognition in national magazines and the press generally, was Francis P. Kimball, 38, employed at the State Commerce Department.

In addition to his civil service post, Mr. Kimball also is an author and historian. Through his research he obtained city, State and Federal approval for the week-long "Cradle" celebration.

It was Mr. Kimball, in a speech before the Albany Dutch Reformed Society, who heralded the fact Albany—New Netherland—was the true birthplace of the American union as the meeting-place of the first Colonial Congress 200 years ago. Other employees, opposed by the Civil Service Employees Association, also played important roles in the event that included an elaborate pageant, special stamp ceremonies and an historic parade.

Philip Kerck, public relations director for the CSEA, obtained the backing of 26 Albany CSEA chapters and the society's 3,000 member civil civil event. Harry G. Fen, CSEA executive assistant, is president of the Association committee working on the pageant. The committee included the 28 chapter presidents in Albany.

The Association furnished much of the money to help finance the pageant. Potter was general stage manager, with Mr. Kimball in charge of the entire show. Mr. Kimball also is a member of the cast. Mr. Kimball is a former CSEA president.

Officials participating in the celebration included Governor Dewey, Senator Irving M. Ives, Mayor Erastus Corning of Albany, Assistant Postmaster General Albert H. Robertson, Representative Leo W. O'Brien and a 14-member congressional committee including the governors of nearby states.

IN EUROPE—State Health Commissioner Herman L. Hillman is in Denmark for the marriage of his daughter, Joyce. Miss Hillman and her future husband, working with the tuberculosis research office of the World Health Organization in Copenhagen.

TOP-RANKING State Education Commissioner Thomas Stowell, veteran director of the S.E. A. pageant were Helen Forte and Miss Hille- boe met her future husband while working service of Dr. Lloyd L. Cheney, permanent principal attorney for Agriculture and Markets.

Richard H. Matus, Health, and James J. Sullivan, Social Welfare, have passed non-competitive promotions into the management and personnel section of personnel posts.

Mr. Dewey has called for the implementation of the social welfare examination unit of the State Department of Civil Service.

Margaret McGuire Named Blind Commission Director

ALBANY, June 21—Margaret McGuire, former director of the B.C. D.A. has been named to head the Division of Blind Welfare, Commissioner Raymond W. Mclntire announced. Mrs. McGuire has been with the Commission for 17 years, the past four years as executive assistant to the director.

Milk McGrath has had 25 years experience in social work in local, State and Federal welfare phases, and as former deputy commissioner of the State Department of Public Welfare, and as an university instructor.

During the last six months, she has been in charge of the social welfare examination unit of the State Department of Civil Service.

The official requirements will be final this week. The foregoing is a advance notice of what they will be.

Applications are expected to be received from Tuesday, July 6 to Friday, August 16. Do not attempt to apply until the opening date. Tentatively announced. The LEADER will publish the announcement promptly.

Budget Powers Called Handicap To Recruitment

SYRACUSE, June 21—It is urgent to meet the many difficulties we face in recruiting good personnel in government if they are to be subordinate to the budgeting agency in the matter of pay, leaves, vacations, and other considerations surrounding recruitment.

So said William F. McDenough, executive assistant to Governor Dewey, Civil Service Employees Association, in an address to the annual meeting of Onondaga chapter. Mr. McDenough also criticized the lack of "understanding, respect, and cooperation" on the part of departments and the yielding to expediency.

"Fair pay plans and fair employment practices are necessary, but they should be definitely established in the answer to these questions." He feared disastrous results of any government agencies in public personnel recruitment.

Testing the Tests And the Testers

W E NOTE an advertisement of the Civil Service Assemble, announcing a new "ready-to-use" test for fire-fighters. The ad is fulsome in praise of the test, which is supposed to be new.

Allow us the liberty of expressing a bit of skepticism.

The more we learn about testing, the more we conclude that those who make tests have a lot to learn about those who they test.

Quite possibly the "pre-tested" test (just what does that mean, by the way—that this test has been proven to select superior-grade firemen) selects men who are "ver-ta"; that is, many of us know people like that, but do they necessarily make the best firemen? By what criterion? The written test may also demonstrate certain other skills, like mathematical ability, or orientation, of unknown value. How swiftly, in an emergency, can a fireman escape from a mass of falling debris? How agile will he be in climbing a ladder to save a person at a high window in a fire-striken structure? How much physical power does his body have to handle the enormous lifting tasks that are at a fire? How swiftly do his nerves and muscles respond to the commands of his brain? New York City has shown, in recent years, how enormously important are tests of physical strength, agility, and coordination—none of which the written test tests.

Seems to us the whole testing process is in the hands of persons who take too narrow a view of the total human mechanism to be guaranteed. We suspect that this is and this background tends to spill over in the tests they construct for all kinds of positions.

HOW TO PUT YOUR SAYINGS TO WORK FOR YOU

By PETER ALLEN

Many plans have been developed to help you and your financial planner to put your sayings to work for you. One of the most popular is based on sound logic called "Monthly Investment Plan." This system works on the principle of investing the same amount of your monthly income in a variety of investments to buy stocks. After a period of time has passed, the plan has bought stocks at a lower cost and then sold them at a higher price. As a result, more money is invested when prices are low in grace periods. The result is that the $1,000 invested when the price of the stock is high, buys $400 when the price of the stock is low.

Here's how to use your savings

How to buy the stock you want by your new Monthly Investment Plan

Now you have to postpone owning that "blue-chip" stock you've thought about ever since it started doing well. Tell us the stock you want, how much you want to put in it and how often you want to put it in. We can do all the work for you.

How a Riffed Employee Can Get Rehired by U.S.

Many Federal employees who lost their jobs through reduction in force, although they have permanent civil service status, may be re-employed if the job requires permanent civil service status and the work performed is on an indefinite basis. The word "reinstate" in Federal civil service terms means to be reemployed by the U. S. Government in a career position. The word "reemployment" as used in this bulletin refers to indefinite employment, or what is often called "reinstatement" in Federal civil service terms.

Status Has Special Value

Former employees with competitive status are entitled to special consideration for reinstatement when a vacancy occurs. Former employees are considered for reinstatement in the same manner as candidates on competitive examination lists. A former employee is covered by the civil service retirement system; in the former agency in which a job he or she held was subject to competitive examination, he or she must compete with the general public to replace an employee separated for other than retirement or death. Former employees do not have the right to reemployment in their former position or any other agreement to which a job he or she held was subject to competitive examination, he or she must compete with the general public to replace an employee separated for other than retirement or death.

Having once obtained civil service status, a former employee can then apply to the Federal Government for reinstatement whenever he chooses, since civil service procedures make sure that no former employee is reemployed in a position to which he is not entitled. If reinstatement is desired, a former employee is entitled to the same guarantees that a former employee is entitled to with respect to reinstatement when a vacancy occurs.
