Pataki's budget: broken promises, wrong choices

Broken promises, wrong choices
Pataki budget is stunningly out of touch with working New Yorkers

At a time when we need a budget proposal that will have New Yorkers pulling together, Governor Pataki has presented a plan that already is us pulling apart.

For weeks prior to the budget release CSEA urged the governor to be fair and balanced in his approach to dealing with the deficit. There is nothing remotely fair or balanced about what the governor has proposed. CSEA members across the state are already overworked and understaffed as they try to do the job right for New Yorkers.

The governor talks about avoiding “job-killing taxes” while putting out job killing proposals that will decimate services, destroy lives and force local governments and school districts to kill jobs or raise taxes to cover the shortfall. It makes no sense for the governor to slam local property taxpayers for the sake of scoring some misguided political points.

Cuts in education and health care aid of the size the governor has proposed will hurt real people in real ways. Raising SUNY tuition and cutting aid programs amounts to a tax on students and working families.

The governor’s continued failure to meet the needs of people with mental illness will be made worse by more cutbacks in services and care; a vague reference to community reinvestment is not an appropriate and comprehensive plan for reform.

These are just a few of the areas of concern in the governor’s ill-conceived proposal. The pages of this edition have other examples of the devastating impact already being felt. There is even more information about the budget and CSEA’s efforts to fight it on our website (www.csealocal1000.net) and I encourage you to visit it often to stay up to date.

It should be clear that New York can only deal with a budget deficit of this size with a fair and balanced approach that includes revenue and reform, not simply slash and burn cutbacks. We need some straight talk and the right tax choices, but in this proposal the governor has made too many of the wrong choices.

Occupational Safety & Health Department — ensuring safe work places

Public and private sector employees in New York State are fortunate to have a legal right to a safe and healthy workplace. The CSEA Occupational Safety and Health (OSH) Department is dedicated to ensuring that CSEA members do indeed work in such environments.

The OSH Department monitors and enforces the Public Employee Safety and Health Act (PESHA), which is based on the Occupational Safety and Health Act (OSHA) and the rules and regulations set by the New York State Department of Labor. The department works with locals and units to ensure that work environments and work procedures are within mandated standards.

It’s not always an easy job. With regulations continually changing and employers looking to push the envelope, the OSH Department is always on guard and ready at an instant to respond to a worker’s inquiry.

The CSEA Occupational Safety and Health Department strives to maintain a highly trained and technical staff both at headquarters and in the field to cover a broad spectrum of areas relevant to our members’ safety. The CSEA Industrial Hygienist in conjunction with OSH Specialists from around the state work in coordination to balance many jobs and specialty areas:

- Keep current on occupational safety and health trends and laws.
- Introduce or comment on safety/health legislation that is of particular importance to employees.
- Initiate statewide awareness of particular “hot spots” in safety and health.
- Provide safety training to field staff and members.
- Produce informational booklets on relevant issues for safe workplaces.

- Promote the education of CSEA members to become effective safety and health advocates in their workplace.
- Work toward obtaining grants that serve the needs of CSEA members.
- Provide technical assistance on safety and health issues to Labor Relations Specialists (LRS) and members.
- Assist in conducting site inspections regarding workplace hazards.
- Work with the local regulatory agencies to ensure timely and effective enforcement of the laws.
- Testify at various hearings or proceedings if expertise is needed.
- Initiate, if necessary, complaints against employers if they discriminate against employees who voice a safety concern.
- Conduct full investigations of fatalities and serious injuries.
- Assist field staff in negotiating safety and health issues in labor management committees and contracts.

Another vital function of the CSEA OSH Department is to work with many state and federal agencies and the issues they regulate. The maze of agencies and the issues they oversee covers a wide spectrum:

NYS Department of Labor — Public Employee Safety and Health (PESHA) Bureau: Enforces Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) standards for public employees which include topics such as asbestos, confined space, fire safety, tuberculosis, AIDS and hepatitis, welding and toxic chemicals.

NYS Department of Health — Regulates pest control, sanitary working conditions, infectious diseases, toxic substances, asbestos training.

NYS Department of Environmental Conservation (DEC) — Regulates disposal of hazardous material, toxic spills, environmental issues, pesticides.

OSH Project Developer Matt Kozak, left, and CSEA Metro Region Statewide Safety and Health committee member Frank Cosentino inspect a work site.

NYS Department of Transportation (DOT) — Regulates transporting hazardous waste, placarding, motor vehicle safety.

NYS Uniform Fire Prevention and Building Codes — Regulates building permits, certificates of occupancy, building construction, occupancy load and fire safety.

CSEA professional staff works in conjunction with activists across the state on the Occupational Safety and Health Committee. Shaping an interest in protecting worker safety, the committee diligently works to advance safety and health issues.

The Occupational Safety and Health Department at CSEA works to protect you! Whether it’s conducting workplace inspections for indoor air quality, questioning a workplace injury or ensuring the safe removal of asbestos, the CSEA OSH team is there to ensure your safe work environment.

For more information and to access safety and health resources, go to the Safety and Health section of the CSEA website.
