Demonstrations stir things up in Monroe

Hundreds of state employees are issuing a wake-up call directly to the public throughout the Monroe County area. The CSEA members are warning that public services are rapidly being eroded as the state sinks deeper in a fiscal disaster.

In a series of informational pickets sponsored by several CSEA state locals, angry members are pointing out layoffs and program cuts have slashed services while morale dwindles for the remaining workforce that toils without a contract for nearly a year.

"We want the public to join us and put pressure on the Governor to negotiate a fair contract," said CSEA Labor Relations Specialist Karen Spies, one of the protest coordinators. "We're tired of him balancing the state budget on the backs of our members. Our members provide priceless services but have not seen pay raises themselves in almost two years while being lagged two weeks' pay."

"We help protect the environment; we care for the sick and mentally ill; we maintain state parks and roads; we maintain the state colleges and universities," said CSEA Labor Relations Specialist Pat Domaratz. "These are basic, needed public services and all of them are being slashed and some are in danger of being wiped out."

"It's important that the public know that everything we do is in the name of public service, and we're regular working folks - not fat-cat politicians," said Ralph Hesson, president of CSEA Judiciary Local 335.

"We want to make sure the public understands that we care for many who are unable to care for themselves," added Geraldine Wiggins, president of Rochester Psychiatric Local 420.

"This campaign should help make it clear to all that we're only looking for fairness to all that the state is looking for fairness from the state," said Duane Wilcox, president of DOT Local 506.

Demonstrations will be held at work locations of all participating CSEA locals during the series. Locals represented are Monroe Developmental Center Local 439, Rochester Psychiatric Center Local 420, Division for Youth/Industry Local 532, Judiciary Local 335, Department of Transportation Local 506, Rochester State Employees Local 012 and SUNY Brockport Local 601.

The injury rates in state facilities are frightening. Meanwhile, psychiatric center workers suffer from patient attacks. Plus a snowplow driver is injured in a fatal accident.

A CSEA member tells of her ordeal as hostage of a prison inmate.

Members newly enrolled since March 13 will receive their Prescription Drug cards in the April 20 mailing. New enrollees who requires the Prescription Drug Benefit prior to receiving the Drug Card should contact the CSEA Employee Benefit Fund, 1-800-323-2732, for assistance.

Also, the CSEA EBF converted to an automated attendant telephone system on March 30. Calls from touch tone telephones will be answered by an automated system. Callers using rotary phones will continue to be assisted by the switchboard operator.
STATE CONTRACT NEGOTIATIONS

The previous contract expired April 1, 1991. Negotiations between CSEA and the state for state workers in the Operational Services, Administrative Services, Institutional Services and Division of Military and Naval Affairs bargaining units broke down when the state declared impasse after months of bargaining. Formal mediation efforts also failed and negotiations are now in the fact-finding stage.

The three-person fact-finding panel will conduct hearings in April and May and will ultimately prepare written recommendations for resolving the dispute. If either side rejects those recommendations, the issue would be sent to the state Legislature for a legislative hearing. Under the state’s Taylor Law, the Legislature could impose a one-year settlement.

Separate negotiations between CSEA and the Office of Court Administration (OCA) for CSEA-represented court workers, stalled for a while over budget problems, are expected to resume soon. Unlike contract talks for other state workers, bargaining for court workers never reached an impasse.

INCREMENTS, LONGEVITY PAY

Decisions are pending on an improper practice charge and a contract grievance filed by CSEA against the state for failure to pay increments and longevity payments to general state employees after the CSEA/NYS contracts expired April 1, 1991.

Legal briefs are due during April on CSEA’s improper practice charge and an administrative law judge’s decision will be issued sometime later. An arbitration hearing is scheduled to be held later this year on CSEA’s contract grievance.

CSEA also filed an improper practice charge after the court system refused to pay increments and longevity payments after April 1, 1991, to court employees. The court system eventually paid the increments last summer.

CSEA also filed a grievance when Health Research Inc. (HRI), a private sector branch of the state Health Department, failed to pay increments to CSEA-represented employees of HRI. The grievance was settled when HRI agreed to pay the increments.

"The Governor and the state want to shirk their responsibilities, but CSEA will not let them," McDermott said. "Through our lawsuits and wide range of legal efforts they will be held accountable."

LAG PAY

Three lag pay schemes have been directed at state workers since 1990 - two of them against court employees.

Gov. Cuomo instituted a one-week lag payroll plan against Executive Branch state employees that took effect in January 1991. The state withheld one day of pay for five consecutive pay periods.

Separate negotiations between CSEA and the state budget. And we’ve been robbed. Without a contract, without a contract...since April Ist. Yet in the past two years, we’ve taken one blow after another! Our salaries have been frozen since January 1990. Our benefits have been slashed with layoffs. The state is playing political games with our retirement funds, diverting money which our retirees depend on, and using it to balance the state budget. And we’ve been without a contract...since April 1st, 1991.

New York still works because we work. But at some point, something has to happen! We’ve been a scapegoat for the Governor...we have nothing left to give...and without things improving, it doesn’t look good for the future of public services in this state.

A CSEA, we’re dedicated to providing the services New Yorkers need and rely on. We’re state employees, and we care for the sick and mentally ill. We protect the environment. We repair the state roads. We maintain the parks and beaches...among many, many other vital services you count on: days, nights, weekends, even holidays.

We’ve been robbed, frozen and slashed.

We’ve been without a contract for one year.

Without a raise for two years.

What’s left?

A two-week pay lag levied on court employees in May 1990 has been repaid, with interest, by order of state and federal courts after the state declared impasse.

A series of other court decisions involving other lag pay cases have gone against the state. In every instance courts have ruled that pay lag does violate the U.S. Constitution and union contracts. CSEA has asked the federal court to issue a summary judgment declaring the pay lag unconstitutional and ordering the state to repay the one week of salary withheld.

The state withheld one day of pay for five consecutive pay periods.

State workers would not get the five days of pay back until they leave state service, which in many cases could be decades from now.

CSEA and other public employee unions filed a lawsuit in federal court charging the pay lag violates the U.S. Constitution and union contracts. CSEA has asked the federal court to issue a summary judgment declaring the pay lag unconstitutional and ordering the state to repay the one week of salary withheld. A federal court ruling is expected soon.

The fight for Harlem Valley

"Policy has to change"

WINGDALE -- CSEA officials slammed state Office of Mental Health (OMH) policy as immoral during state legislative hearings at Harlem Valley Psychiatric Center.

"Abandoning Harlem Valley is just the latest and most graphic evidence that OMH policy is government without a heart or a head, and that has to change," CSEA President Joe McDermott said. "OMH is abandoning the mentally ill, wasting the experienced state workforce and dumping on the local community."

More than 300 people, including OMH Commissioner Richard Surles, heard McDermott and others re-emphasize CSEA's contention that OMH policy is The Shame of All New York.

The hearing, conducted by key state lawmakers at the request of CSEA and other groups, focused on the OMH plan to close the psychiatric center within two years without developing appropriate alternatives for the patients, staff and community. But it was clear that the issue goes beyond the immediate concern for Harlem Valley.

As if to thumb its nose at the public, the workforce and the patients, OMH announced shortly after the hearing that they will close the facility as scheduled. CSEA called the action a mockery of the public policy decision-making process.

At the hearing, McDermott called on the legislators to demand responsible action.

"The first and most obvious action," he said, "should simply be to tell OMH to stop going forward with closure until all the patient care and employee issues have been addressed."

CSEA Southern Region President Pat Masioli testified that OMH irresponsibility goes beyond the mentally ill.

"The state has let down both the workforce and the community because the closure of Harlem Valley will all but destroy both," Masioli said. "The psychiatric center is the area's largest employer and the potential loss of 1,200 jobs will devastate the local economy."

"People have dedicated their lives to providing an excellent quality care here, but the state just doesn't care," CSEA Harlem Valley Psychiatric Center Local 409 President Henry Walters said.

"The Governor promises to pull out all the stops to save the jobs of auto workers in Tarrytown," Walters said, "but he turns his back on his own state employees and the people they're trying to help."

The fight on Long Island

CSEA mental health members on Long Island have protested against the agency's policy direction at several demonstrations.

Members at Pilgrim, Central Islip and Kings Park Psychiatric Centers demonstrated to raise awareness about the impact of cutbacks and the deterioration of working conditions.

At a legislative hearing, CSEA Long Island Region President Gloria Moran attacked state plans to close Kings Park Psychiatric Center and consolidate services at Pilgrim within 10 years.

"We are not satisfied in any way with what we've seen about how Long Island's psychiatric needs are going to be addressed," Moran said.

Layoffs postponed

CSEA efforts to improve the state mental health system have made some progress.

More than 400 layoffs scheduled for May have been postponed until at least October.

There's no guarantee the layoffs will be avoided altogether, but CSEA sees the delay as a positive step and will press for long term alternatives.

"This action will not solve the understaffing problem on the wards," CSEA President Joe McDermott said, "but it will help prevent the situation from getting even worse and keep people working while we seek real solutions."

CSEA lobbies to improve system

ALBANY -- CSEA mental hygiene activists pressed state lawmakers for immediate improvements in the system at a CSEA lobby day at the state Capitol.

"CSEA's message is clear and consistent. We are demanding responsible action by the state and that means the Legislature, the Governor and the Office of Mental Health," said CSEA Executive Vice President Danny Donohue, who chairs CSEA's Mental Hygiene Task Force.

"CSEA will not accept these people pointing the finger at each other while the system goes down the toilet," Donohue said.
Injuries hurt

ALBANY — State mental hygiene cutbacks are costing New Yorkers a lot more than services. CSEA's annual compilation of occupational injury figures shows that lost workdays are way up over last year even as the workforce has been cut significantly. Aside from the cost in human suffering, the situation is expensive. Even worse, the state is still failing to cut its costs.

Combined, the Office of Mental Health (OMH) and Office of Mental Retardation and Developmental Disabilities (OMRDD) had their workforces cut by eight percent in 1991. But lost workdays due to occupational injuries increased by a nine percent increase for the two agencies.

The situation was particularly bad in OMH. OMH suffered a nine percent workforce reduction but lost workdays increased 13 percent from 1990 figures to a total of 166,738 lost workdays.

In OMRDD the workforce was cut 7.5 percent and lost workdays increased 5 percent over 1990 figures to a total of 171,823 lost workdays.

Clearly the workforce reductions are causing people to suffer more serious injuries. "This is disgraceful," said CSEA President Joe McDermott. "OMH and OMRDD employees deserve a safe workplace."

"There's plenty of blame to be shared between the politicians and the bureaucrats," he said. "Year after year CSEA has demonstrated how bad the situation is and detailed the vicious circle of injury and understaffing," McDermott said, "and year after year they make it worse."

McDermott also noted that cutting the workforce is penny-wise and dollar foolish. A conservative estimate pegs the direct cost of the 1991 lost workdays at more than $30 million. OMH alone has spent an additional $50 million on overtime in the past year, driven in large measure by their staffing and injury problems.

These figures do not even account for the indirect costs.

MHTA attacked by ex-patient on Staten Island ferry

STATEN ISLAND - A routine commute turned into a trip to hell for CSEA Local 446 member Deborah Duff, a therapy aide at South Beach Psychiatric Center. On her day off while aboard a Staten Island Ferry, she was brutally assaulted and terrorized by a mental patient dumped from South Beach.

Duff, a 4'11" slight woman, was decked by a smashing blow to her face delivered by a 6'2", 180-pound male in his twenties.

It's not uncommon for South Beach staff members to spot many former mental patients among homeless vagrants squatting at NYC ferry terminals.

While riding the ferry, Duff recognized the man as a former patient.

"I thought at the time he didn't look good, like he might not be taking his medication," she said. But concentrating on her book, she paid no attention until the client was standing over her.

"I thought, what is this guy going to do?" Then he sat down and said hello. He asked if I was a psychiatrist from the hospital. I asked how he was doing and we exchanged a few remarks. I returned to reading my book. Then, without any warning, he closed his fist and punched me in the eye."

Reeling in pain she glanced at other passengers. "They were petrified and I was thinking, why does somebody get up and help me?" Then another man came forward to pull the agitated client away from Duff.

Ferry personnel later found the attacker on an upper deck. He denied any knowledge of the attack. Police booked him while Duff was taken to a hospital for X-rays and examined for head trauma.

Though a judge issued an Order of Protection, Duff is frustrated and astonished that a known mental patient was released by police without referral for psychiatric evaluation.

Aide says she's not a punching bag

BINGHAMTON - "I don't feel my job is to come into work to be a punching bag."

With those words, Rosalie Atkinson, a secure care treatment aide at Binghamton Psychiatric Center, summed up her feelings about a recent client attack she suffered. This was the second time Atkinson was attacked by the same individual.

According to Atkinson, she was assaulted while doing paperwork in an office in the faculty's secure care ward. Suddenly, a female client who had been upset earlier barged in and grabbed Atkinson by the collar of her sweater, and proceeded to punch, swing and scratch at her face. It took several minutes for a nearby co-worker to come and help.

Atkinson sustained back injuries, and several deep facial scratches. In the previous attack she suffered similar injuries.

Atkinson filed assault charges against the client in both cases, but said that local authorities had little legal recourse.

To add insult to Atkinson's injuries, nothing happened to the client after the original attack and up until a month after the second attack the client remained at the facility with group privileges, enabling her to roam freely around the center and the neighboring community.

She added that the client had also assaulted two clients and started two mattress fires in her room.

"People need to be aware that it's getting more dangerous and that people are getting hurt," she said.

Editor’s note: Frances King is a victim of a desperate inmate at a state prison and, CSEA says, a state policy of cutbacks and layoffs that left her and other workers defenseless. King, a member of CSEA Local 175, was injured when she was taken hostage by an inmate at the maximum security Wende Correctional Facility in Erie County in February. King believes her damaged wrists will mend and the multiple bruises will heal. She hopes the mental scars will also disappear. She is currently on compensation leave and under a doctor's care at home.

ALDEN — The hostage-taking of a CSEA member who is civilian prison employee at Wende State Correctional Facility in Erie County has heightened union demands for adequate corrections facility staffing and improved safety measures statewide.

“We’re thankful that Fran King survived this attack,” CSEA President Joe McDermott said. “But the state Department of Corrections owes her and all our members who work in prisons a re-doubled effort to guard their safety.”

King, laundry supervisor at the maximum security prison, was taken hostage by inmate Santos Torres, 39, while she and Torres were in the prison laundry alone, near the end of the work day. Several other inmate laundry workers had returned to their cell blocks but Torres remained behind to do mending tasks and unload washers and dryers. The corrections officer position that normally would have provided security to that area had been cut from the state budget last year.

King was working at a desk when Torres approached her from behind, grabbed her by her wrists, kicked a chair from beneath her and wrestled her to the floor.

“He got me to the floor and then placed his knee in my stomach as I was fighting him,” King said. “After I told him I couldn’t breathe, he let me up off my back to a sitting position against the refrigerator. He threatened to knock me out if I didn’t stop struggling, and he warned me not to scream.”

He then tied her hands behind her back and tied her feet. As Torres began pacing and wondering aloud what he should do next, King said, she put to work training she received six years earlier.

“I tried to keep him calm, maintaining eye contact and keeping conversation going,” King said. “I remembered that from a training session when I first started here.”

At her urging, Torres called the superintendent. After a standoff with officers and the superintendent outside the laundry office, Torres allowed King to leave, followed instructions from the officers and laid down on the floor to surrender.

King suffered painful injuries to both wrists and multiple bruises but feels fortunate it wasn’t worse.

“I didn’t know until afterwards that he was in for sexual abuse,” King said. “I also didn’t know, as Torres did, that his parole date had just been pushed back from this year to 1994. Torres is serving a 12-to-24-year term for sexual abuse, robbery and assault. Torres, who wanted to go to a New York City-area prison, was immediately transferred to Auburn Correctional Facility after taking King hostage.

Meanwhile, Fran King attempts to recover from the ordeal that could have cost her life.

“I’m truly grateful to all my fellow CSEA members, from all over the state, who called after finding out that I was the hostage involved,” she said. “It’s really heartwarming to know so many people care.”
ELMIRA - The stress of working in a prison every day is magnified at Southport Correctional Facility, a "maxi-maxi" prison for the state's worst offenders.

Since last May, the tension has been even higher. That's when several guards were held hostage during a prison uprising.

CSEA is now working to help Southport employees to recognize, reduce and relieve stress on and off the job. Recently, CSEA held a day-long stress reduction workshop, "Think Safe. Act Safe," sponsored by the joint CSEA/NYS Labor-Management Committees.

According to instructor Ellen Sadowski of Cornell University's College of Industrial and Labor Relations, the goal of the stress management workshop was to teach the employees to "ride the waves" of everyday life. For some employees at the workshop, it seemed like it would be a tough job learning how to "surf" over what seemed like tidal waves of workplace stress.

Louise Fields said that there had been a large increase in job stress since the hostage-taking. Many, like calculations clerk Louise Fields, witnessed the event first-hand.

"We saw the whole thing from the business office," she said. "We could see the inmates on the roof with the hostages, parading them around and beating them," she said.

"That's not something you forget right away. You can shove it in the back of your mind, but it's always there. It could happen to you."

Earlier this year, Fields attended a stress management course held in Syracuse, provided through the CSEAP Program, which she said helped a lot. She said she was glad to see the on-site program, and hoped more like it would be held.

According to keyboard specialist Viola Powers, stress in the workplace is at an all-time personal high. Powers, who has worked for the state for 29 years at several facilities, said that the state fiscal problems, combined with the hostage incident, has made Southport a very stressful place.

"I never felt this way before. Now, I'm getting really angry," she said. "It's just more and more demands with less people to do the work."

Carpenter Steve Kenyon agreed, saying that since the riot, "everyone was on edge." He added a positive note, however, saying the changes made by the state since the uprising, including additional security measures, are helping to get things back to normal and decrease stress.

Powers echoed those feelings, and said that she was "very impressed" with the workshop and was sure that it would help to reduce the stress at Southport.

ALBANY — CSEA protested increased use of inmate labor at state correctional facilities during a legislative hearing.

CSEA Assistant Contract Administrator Jim Martin testified before the Assembly Committees on Labor and Corrections.

"The current initiative by the (corrections) department to employ as many inmates as possible at the expense of law-abiding, tax-paying civilian employees is absolutely unconscionable," he said. The decision to systematically attrit civilian employees is "excess" jobs. The risk is great. A CSEA member supervising a laundry crew at Wende Correctional Facility was taken hostage by an inmate (see page 6). The security position once assigned to the laundry had been eliminated.

Workers in jobs that have been classified as "excess" have been given opportunities to transfer, which can mean moving to another region of the state. But inmates have been used to replace workers in "excess" jobs.

Inmates are not only replacing laid-off workers, they are filling vacant union positions. They are working as meat cutters, power plant workers, snowplow operators, clerks, electricians.

"We are sensitive to the fact that corrections officials' decisions are being driven by the lack of funds. They are under the same pressures as other agencies to do more and more with less," Martin said. "However, as long as it continues to be public policy in New York state to replace the workforce with inmates, CSEA will continue to adamantly oppose that policy."

Inmates shouldn't take prison employees' jobs

CSEA's spring schedule is listed below.

The career enhancement programs offered by CSEAP are the results of benefits negotiated by CSEA for members in the Administrative Services Unit.

KNOw YOUR RIGHTS

The right to discuss all work-related matters with your union representative

The Taylor Law, which protects public employees in New York state, prohibits public employers from interfering with the rights of employees to participate in their union. This includes protection of the right to testify at a grievance arbitration or a disciplinary arbitration and to discuss the employee’s potential testimony with representatives of the union. Even if an employer plans to call a union-represented employee as a witness to support management’s allegations in a case, the employee has the right to discuss his or her testimony with the union. If an employer directs an employee not to speak to his or her union representative about testimony that he or she is planning to give at a hearing, this is a violation of the Taylor Law.

Here’s a case in point

Management at the O.D. Heck Developmental Center interviewed Nicole Caisse, a CSEA member, about events Caisse had witnessed on March 13, 1991. The events were the subject of a notice of discipline against another CSEA member. That member was later found innocent, according to CSEA Associate Attorney Paul Bamberger, who handled both the initial case and subsequent charges against management.

CSEA filed an improper practice charge alleging that the management representative who interviewed Caisse told her not to discuss with CSEA the events she saw which led to patient abuse charges against the other union member. CSEA accused management of violating the Taylor Law.

The case was settled when management signed a stipulation “that it understands its obligation under the Taylor Law not to interfere with, restrain or coerce any CSEA employee involved as a witness in a grievance with respect to the exercise of that person’s protected rights. Further, it understands its obligation not to discriminate against such persons with respect to their membership in or participation in an employee organization, or to subject them to any negative repercussions for discussing grievance or arbitration matters with CSEA representatives.”

This CSEA informational leaflet has been posted throughout the O.D. Heck Developmental Center. The leaflet informs union members of their right to participate in their union without interference from management.

"I’ve been waiting for years for a decision like this," said O.D. Heck Local 445 President Fran Kennedy. "We hope CSEA’s informational campaign at O.D. Heck will put an end to these scare tactics by management."

"For too long, O.D. Heck management and other OMRDD facility managers have used a variety of methods in an effort to stop CSEA members from exercising their rights under the law," CSEA Labor Relations Specialist Kate Luscombe said. "This is a great win for our members."

IMPORTANT NOTICE

Recent inquires from EBF members indicate that cold and flu-type medications have been considered as “Maintenance Drugs,” which limits purchases at local pharmacies to the initial prescription and one refill. That requires all additional refills to be processed through the Mail Order procedure.

Effective immediately this will no longer be the practice. Short-term antibiotics, prescription cold/cough medications and analgesics will be available with no restrictions on the number of refills at your local pharmacy.

A message from CSEA President Joe McDermott

Holding accountable those who shirk responsibilities

These are difficult times for public employees. Politicians and the media want to use us as scapegoats. At times like these we are in tremendous battles to protect the gains we have made through years of tough collective bargaining.

CSEA is moving on several fronts to force the state to pay increments and longevity payments that have been illegally withheld and to overturn the lag pay scheme that literally robbed a week's pay from every state employee. A status report on these and other pending legal actions can be found on Page 3 of this edition of The Public Sector.

In hotly pursuing these legal actions, CSEA is upholding the law and the sanctity of our contracts.

And even as we continue to work for a new contract, we battle to protect what we already have. Our work rules, the wide range of benefits CSEA has negotiated over the years, health insurance and terms and conditions of employment continue in effect, even though the contract itself expired a year ago. Why? Only because CSEA fought for that type of protection, now afforded by the Triboro Amendment under the Taylor Law, to safeguard workers from being stripped of their hard-won gains simply because management refused to negotiate a new contract when the previous one expired.

I have always believed that if something is worth fighting for, it is worth fighting for with everything you have. Our contract, increments and longevity, our jobs, our benefits, the services we provide and the lag pay the state stole from us are all worth fighting for.

I expect a decision soon in a federal court lawsuit brought by CSEA against the Mario Cuomo-devised pay lag scheme that literally robbed state workers of a week’s pay.

If, as most of us expect, the federal court rules in favor of CSEA and declares the pay lag unconstitutional, the state will be forced to pay the money back. I recognize that the state would probably appeal such a decision and could drag the case on for a long time, but I am confident we will win in the end and at some time the pay lag will be nothing more than a footnote in history.

And there is a real probability the state will have to repay the increments and longevity payments that are being improperly withheld from state workers.

Those responsible for these harebrained schemes forged ahead after ignoring warnings from CSEA and dismissing advice from some of their own experts that a lag payroll was clearly unconstitutional and that withholding increments and longevity payments was wrong and would not hold up to legal challenges.

CSEA began our legal challenges in these cases quite some time ago. I wish the wheels of justice turned more quickly, but the process takes a considerable amount of time to run its course. While the final decisions are made by administrative law judges, arbitrators, courts or PERB, I believe our cases are very strong and that we will win on the merits.

While these particular battles deal with state employee issues, our defense of these fundamental rights will benefit all public employees. If the state is allowed to go unchallenged, other public employers will copy the state’s actions.

One of our jobs as a labor union is to stand up to injustices wherever we encounter them. We win some and we lose some, but we must always stand up and make the effort. In these instances I honestly believe that justice will prevail.

Women's group honors Gloria Moran

ROSLYN HARBOR - CSEA Long Island Region President Gloria Moran was recently honored for her outstanding labor leadership by a women's employment rights advocacy group called Women On The Job.

"It is through her example that other women are encouraged to continue the struggle for equal employment rights," McCormick said.

Moran, who was a Nassau County crossing guard before becoming CSEA regional president, is a vice president of the Long Island Federation of Labor, where she is the first woman officer.

The granddaughter of a coal miner, Gloria learned about labor from her family. Her father organized garment workers and her uncles were all union officials.

In 20 years, Moran has served in a number of union positions, most recently as region president for the 55,000-member Long Island region.

"I was thrilled to be honored by Women On The Job," Moran said. "I've had union blood running through my veins since I can remember, yet I never dreamed I would be one of the leaders in the largest union in New York and that I would break ground for other female union activists."

Time to start planning for Public Employee Day

New York state honors those who work for state and local governments, school district and other public entities on May 12 with Public Employee Day.

Public Employee Day is an opportunity to recognize the hard-working people who keep schools open, roads clear and safe, the ill and disabled cared for, and the offices in schools, villages, towns, cities, counties and the state functioning.

CSEA locals and units are encouraged to celebrate Public Employees Day. Remember, New York Works Because We Work.

Working for change

CSEA PALs lobby state Legislature

ALBANY — CSEA Political Action Liaisons (PALs) flooded the halls of the state Capitol and Legislative Office Building recently to promote the union’s legislative program.

The PALs lobbied their legislators all day, promoting legislation CSEA supports.

That includes: legislation to limit contracting out by public employers; tax legislation to force the wealthy and corporations to pay their fair share in taxes; laws to ensure state mental hygiene clients get quality care and mental hygiene employees get job security; a law to create a board of trustees for the Public Employee Retirement System; and legislation to allow non-teaching school district employees to apply for unemployment compensation during summer break.

New Assembly Speaker Saul Weprin, one of a number of legislators who addressed the PALs during a lunch meeting, said the contributions of public employees are noticed.

"I won’t abandon the people who have devoted themselves to public service just because the political winds have changed. I can’t lie to you: I won’t say ‘Don’t worry.’ This will be another difficult year," Weprin said. "I’ll do everything I can to make sure New York’s public employees are not sacrificed in the name of fiscal politics."

State Sen. Tarry Lombardi, chair of the Senate Finance Committee, also spoke to the PALs.

The PALs also heard from Assembly Representative Helene Weinstein, chair of the Assembly Governmental Employees Committee, and Sen. James Lack, chair of the Senate Labor Committee.

Lack urged CSEA to continue its fight for mandatory agency shop for all New York public employees (see page 21).

Weinstein listed the CSEA-supported legislation she plans to bring to committee on a variety of CSEA issues.

"I plan to take the lead on a series of bills requiring notification of public employees who are being laid off," she said.

She also pledged to support retirement system reforms (see page 16).

CSEA members working in the Offices of Mental Health (OMH) and Mental Retardation and Developmental Disabilities (OMRDD) also lobbied legislators recently (see page 4).

During the lobby day, the Governor announced there would be 1,400 fewer state employee layoffs than originally anticipated.

"CSEA has been out there talking to legislators and with agencies and the Governor’s Office of Employee Relations," CSEA Lobbyist Tom Hartnett said. "Obviously, we’re making a difference."

CSEA Secretary Irene Carr praised the PALs and encouraged them on their mission.

"I congratulate you all for taking the time and being here," she said. "Hold your head high. You can be very, very proud of your union and you can carry that pride with you as you talk to your legislators."

CSEA Executive Vice President Danny Donohue echoed her encouragement.

"Think how bad things would be if you weren’t here to lobby for CSEA’s program," he said. "Your efforts are very important and greatly appreciated."

Voting for more than the allowed number of delegates will void the AFSCME convention. The candidates are listed on the sample ballots by region and state as they will appear on the ballot. Ballots must be returned by 8 a.m. April 22, 1992. The ballots returned later will not be counted. Ballots may be cast for individual candidates, an entire slate of candidates or combinations of both. But the total vote cast cannot exceed the number of delegates assigned for that particular region. Voting for more than the allowed number of delegates will void the entire ballot. Members may, however, vote for fewer than the region's designated delegates total. No write-ins will be allowed. Ballots should be placed inside the "secret ballot envelope" provided and sealed. The "secret ballot envelope" should be placed in the enclosed self-addressed, postage-paid return envelope for mailing. Members should be sure to sign the validation certificate and enclose the certificate in the postage-paid return envelope according to the instructions. Failure to sign your name on the member validation certificate will void the ballot. Members who do not receive an official ballot may request a replacement ballot by calling, toll-free, 1-800-466-CSEA, on or after April 9, 1992. CORSACRE -- A state snowplow being operated by a solo driver was involved in an accident that claimed the life of an innocent motorist and left the CSEA member in the hospital with a broken vertebra.

DOT plow operator Daniel Holluck was working solo March 22 during a snowstorm when his plow went stuck in the road's dirt shoulder on Route 8W near here. The truck then veered into oncoming traffic, killing 26-year-old Richard Van Deusen of Ellenville after slamming into the driver's side of his car. The other individual injured in the incident was treated and released from the hospital. The state Department of Transportation began a One Person Plowing (OPP) policy this winter. CSEA opposed the plan, saying it would compromise safety. CSEA has a Public Employee Safety and Health (PES&H) complaint and an improperly charge pending against the policy.

"From the start it was clear that the savings were not going to be what DOT said they would be," said CSEA DOT Local 676 President Mike Barlow, who chairs the CSEA-DOT Labor-Management Committee. "Whatever they might have saved was at the expense of safety."

"This angers me terribly," Barlow added. "Fortunately, somebody had to get killed and we have a driver laying in the hospital. It makes me mad as hell because DOT chose to ignore our legitimate concerns."

Barlow also challenged DOT's contention that OPP has proceeded without problems.

"Even though it's been a very mild winter for the most part and there's been less plowing activity, more than 80 incidents have occurred statewide," he said.

The Route 8W mishap was the second fatal accident involving a one person snow plow in less than a week. On March 18 in Chautauqua County, 54-year-old Charles Smith of Ellenville was killed when he apparently lost control of his vehicle on Route 394 outside Falkner and struck a pole head on. The plow operator was not injured.
Rob Curtiss is a believer

By Daniel X. Campbell
CSEA Communications Associate

DELMAR - Rob Curtiss, a CSEA member with 32 years of service with the state Department of Taxation and Finance, watches silently as a group of visitors to an exhibit of Ripley's Believe It or Not cartoons wander through an Albany-area library.

"What they don't realize is that all of those cartoons on exhibit are all from one person, one contributor - me," he said. Believe It or not, Rob Curtiss is telling the truth. What began as a passing interest for the processor of personal tax returns several years ago developed into a hobby and is now a time-consuming addiction.

Curtiss has had 210 contributions published in the Believe It or Not series, possibly the most by any single contributor.

To help promote the Ripley's series as it approaches its centennial year, Curtiss is sponsoring a one-man exhibit of his published items at nine Albany-area libraries over the next six months.

"I just love doing research, love finding odd bits of information. And then I enjoy seeing if Ripley's will accept my latest contribution, and then how they will portray it in cartoon form in the Ripley's Believe It or Not cartoon feature that appears in over 200 publications on a daily basis worldwide," he said.

Each of his 210 published contributions has its own little research story. "I read four papers thoroughly every day and I just love finding little tidbits of odd information. And of course, I've always been delighted with the way the Ripley staff, based in Toronto, Canada, turns the fact into an interesting cartoon. That's creativity," Curtiss said.

Despite his extensive contact with the Ripley organization, Curtiss said he has never visited one of the permanent Ripley's museum exhibitions located throughout the United States and in Canada, Australia and Denmark.

"I'd love to go to one," he said. "I do enjoy seeing the daily and especially the Sunday colored Ripley cartoon."

Sometimes the research takes on a personal slant. "I once submitted a contribution about Cranberry the Clown marrying another clown in front of 3,000 well-wishers at the Altamont Fair, near Albany. I thought it was a nice bit of local color. When the Ripley's cartoon was published in a Sunday color cartoon edition, I was thrilled," Curtiss said. "And then the phone rang and it was Cranberry the Clown, thanking me for making her marriage world famous," Curtiss said. "After you contribute one item, you want to do more. After your first 100, Ripley's sends you a very nice certificate. All I know is that I'm always looking for the next contribution."

Legislator to pursue retirement system reforms

ALBANY — Assembly Representative Helene Weinstein told CSEA political action liaisons (PALS) she will fight to improve the Employee Retirement System. The newly appointed chair of the Assembly’s Governmental Employees Committee, Weinstein addressed CSEA PALS during a recent lobby day.

She said she plans to submit legislation that would create a Board of Trustees for the Employee Retirement System, one of CSEA’s major pension reform goals. The Board would give public employees a voice in the administration of the pension fund. The system now has only one trustee, the state comptroller.

Weinstein also said she supports legislation that would create a cost-of-living increase for pensions and to protect the health insurance coverage of retired school district employees.

"You are the state of New York. The backbone of our state is the public employees," Weinstein said. "You will not be forgotten."

CSEA retirees listen to presidential candidates debate in health care forum

NASHUA, NH — More than 30 CSEA retirees heard what the Democratic candidates for president have to say about health care.

The CSEA retirees, all from CSEA’s Capital Region, were among 100 AFSCME retirees of the 250 people at the forum, sponsored by the New Hampshire Council of Senior Citizens.

Candidate Bill Clinton and former candidates Bob Kerrey and Tom Harkin participated in the forum. Each favors health care reform and pledged to make it part of the presidential debate.

"Our members took advantage of the opportunity to hear the candidates themselves discuss their positions on health care," CSEA Director of Retiree Programs Kathleen Cahalan said. "The forum was well worth the long trip and was a exciting experience, especially since we m ay have heard the next president."

Danger on the job at Orange County DSS

By Anita Manley
CSEA Communications Associate

NEWBURGH - A deputy sheriff is now working at the Orange County Department of Social Services (DSS) offices in Newburgh and Middletown after an employee was stabbed.

An alarm system that did not work could have cost the employee her life.

County Executive Mary McPhillips also ordered metal detectors to be placed in the two offices to screen clients for weapons after Labor Relations Specialist Carl Rasmussen and Unit President Dave Score met with her to discuss the most recent assault.

Reported incidents from DSS records over the last few months include personal and phone threats, verbal abuse, intoxicated clients and clients with weapons.

The latest incident involved a mentally disturbed client who called his caseworker and demanded that she give him money. He later showed up at the office, brandishing a knife.

She turned away as he tried to stab her in the stomach, but he managed to nick her back. The worker escaped with superficial wounds and was treated at a local hospital and released, Shop Steward Terry Fisher said.

The attacker escaped, but eventually turned himself in and was arrested.

Fisher has been concerned with security in the building, she said. Most offices here have only one entrance. When the disturbed client was fighting with the caseworker, they blocked an office and no one could leave to get help. Worse, an alarm system used to signal the front desk didn’t work.

Fisher has also asked for glass partitions around receptionists’ desks to protect them.

Another complaint is that there is no standard procedure in place to deal with emergencies, Fisher said.

Security guards in the building are not trained and do not wear uniforms, she said. Fisher recalled a day when an intoxicated and disorderly client was causing a disturbance and a worker called the security guard.

“He said he couldn’t leave his desk,” she said. “The employees had to restrain the man themselves.”

Fisher also pointed out that there is no employee entrance. When workers arrive in the morning, they run a gauntlet of clients waiting to come into the building.

Employees have complained to county officials before, and they sent a petition to the DSS commissioner in October. The commissioner showed up at the building with the sheriff one day, but never followed up on the issues.

“It’s been a disaster waiting to happen,” said DSS employee Brian Randazzo. “The workers have been concerned not just for themselves, but for the clients.

Food stamp demands flood Rockland County DSS

POMONA - Monday is “Food Stamp Day” at the Rockland County Department of Social Service (DSS) office.

The lines snake through the lobby where about 100 people are crowded into a space more appropriate for 50.

Some were here a week before and had to return just to see an examiner. Many are new applicants, casualties of the economic times. Most will be here all day.

Mondays and Thursdays are food stamp days in Pomona. Clients begin to form a line before 8 a.m. hoping to see an examiner before the day is over. Pomona is the only place residents can apply for food stamps.

“There is not enough manpower in the district offices to take all the applications for food stamps,” caseworker Ronnie DelVecchio said.

There are security guards here. People get angry and frustrated. Many do not like to wait. Recently, a group of applicants, told to return on another day, converged angrily on a county employee. The Sheriff’s Department had to be called to control the crowd.

DelVecchio fears for the safety of the elderly and the children. The day the sheriff was called, more than 150 people were waiting to be seen. Employees can process 60 to 80 applicants a day.

More staff and equipment are needed, DelVecchio said.

“We have between 40 and 50 examiners and only eight computers and two copy machines,” she said. “It’s impossible to process an application without a computer and a copy machine. The paperwork is incredible.”

Layoffs last year didn’t help the department, Social Services Commissioner Noah Weinberg says he understands the frustration of the employees.

Weinberg has promised to look into the equipment complaints.

DelVecchio said hiring new examiners is not easy.

“You try to replace people fast, but it entails a lot,” she said.

CSEA claims Cohoes mayor retaliated against unit officer

COHOES - After 24 years, the city of Cohoes is cutting Marilyn Rosney’s full-time job to a part-time job, and she thinks it’s just retaliation for her attempt to demand her rights.

Rosney’s was the only position cut to supposedly balance the city’s budget out of 200 full-time positions, Cummings said.

“This is the first IP the clerical unit has filed against the city of Cohoes administration in more than five and a half years,” Cummings said. “But it certainly will not be the last if the Signoracci administration continues to intimidate our membership.”

While Rosney’s position as a secretary in the city’s Civil Service Commission office had been cut to part-time, the public demand for information about civil service exams has not diminished.

“We know of instances where people seeking test information had to go to the school district to get proper information,” Cummings said. “In our opinion that proves the need for Rosney’s position to be full-time.”

In White Plains:

Roche finally gets court award

WHITE PLAINS — At long last, Joe Roche has received the $25,000 a federal jury awarded him last August.

The jury awarded Roche the money after ruling that White Plains city officials violated his rights as CSEA unit president.

Roche, an assistant engineer, was suspended from his job after the mayor accused him of provoking a physical confrontation during contract negotiations.

Roche alleged that the mayor interfered with his ability to function as unit president by barring him from city property.

Following months of disciplinary hearings, Roche was fired. A week later, though, a federal jury ruled the mayor had violated Roche’s rights and awarded the $25,000 in compensatory damages.

The mayor appealed the decision, but the judge denied the appeal.

Roche is appealing his firing in court.

“One battle of the war is over, but we have to continue the fight,” he said. “The only positive thing is that a jury made the award and in a sense they believed I was telling the truth. It was quite evident they realized a misdeed was done.”

CSEA files IP over Yates County contract

PENN YAN — CSEA has filed an improper practice (IP) charge against Yates County after the county Legislature rejected a contract negotiated with the CSEA Yates County Unit.

CSEA charges that the county legislature voted against the county contract article which provides for maintenance of standards.

CSEA files improper practice (IP) over Yates County contract over the shifts.

Grievance restores Westchester differential

WHITE PLAINS — A CSEA-filed grievance led to the restoration of $2,500 shift differential payments for some Westchester County Department of Social Service employees.

Senior social caseworkers in the Port Chester District Office had collected the shift differential for 10 years when the county stopped paying it.

CSEA filed the grievance based on a contract article which provides for "maintenance of standards."

CENTRAL ISLIP -- The CSEA Central Islip School District Unit is sponsoring a night of amateur boxing to raise money for scholarships for children of CSEA members in the district.

The CSEA Unit will hold its First Annual Scholarship Boxing Match at 7 p.m. on May 15 at the Central Islip High School, Wheeler Road.

Tickets are $10 in advance and $12 at the door. For tickets, call Wally at 435-8302 or 435-1995, Arlene at 581-4943 or Marge at 234-0250.

Sixteen amateur bouts are on the card, and all the boxes have Golden Gloves experience. Special guests expected to attend include world welterweight champion James “Buddy” McGirt and welterweight contender Jake “The Snake” Rodriguz.

"People will get to see some extraordinary boxing talent while we raise money for continuing education for the children of CSEA members," said Wally Ahrem, unit scholarship committee chairman.

Arlington workers win award

The Arlington Central School District contracted out the installation of new locks on students’ lockers, but the plan backfired when CSEA fought for the district employees usually assigned the work.

Maintenance workers customarily install the locks, Region III Labor Relations Specialist Larry Natoli said, and the district’s action took overtime pay away from four CSEA members.

“The school district was looking to save money by hiring a school custodian and his wife to do the job,” Natoli explained.

After CSEA filed the past practice grievance on behalf of maintenance workers Dana Pierce, Steve Cortright, James Smith and George Livingston, school district officials settled the case by agreeing to pay each employee $250.

The grievance was an important win, “not just monetarily, but for the security of the unit,” CSEA Unit President Tim Cotton said.

Unemployment legislation introduced

ALBANY — CSEA is progressing in its work to get New York to provide unemployment insurance benefits for some school district employees during school breaks.

The Assembly Labor Committee reported out of committee a bill which would allow certain non-instructional employees to collect unemployment benefits when schools are closed for vacations.

Death brings home point that layoffs are about people

Suicide follows layoff notice

A Nassau County Department of Social Services (DSS) worker apparently committed suicide after receiving a layoff notice, according to police. According to co-workers and the police report, the 45-year-old woman, a member of the CSEA Social Services Unit of Nassau County Local 830, committed suicide at home shortly after learning she was being laid off.

More than 2,000 Nassau County workers have been laid off under a planned budget cuts.

"Layoffs are about people," CSEA statewide President Joe McDermott said. "Each layoff has consequences in human terms which cannot be ignored. The tragic death of this young woman reminds us of that fact."

"This woman's death is a poignant reminder to the county that the layoffs are not simple about budgets and money, but about human lives," added CSEA Long Island Region President Gloria Moran.

Fellow co-workers flooded the Nassau County Board of Supervisors meeting a few days after the suicide to express their anger at the county for not taking into account the human emotions and devastation the layoffs have caused.

"There has been absolutely no follow-through or referrals for those who have been laid off or for those who are dealing with the stress of being left to do all the work," one DSS member said. "Any help and direction has been given by the union, not the employer."

Members protest short-staffing

About 250 CSEA members from the Nassau County Sheriff's Department demonstrated outside a recent meeting of the Board of Supervisors to protest short-staffing conditions at the county jail. Inside, CSEA Sheriff's Department Unit President Dan Murphy pleaded with the board to take corrective action.

Murphy said he fears for the safety of the employees at the Nassau County Correctional Center. He said the jail is overcrowded but there are less corrections officers at posts than before a recent rash of prisoner escapes from the facility.

"The county is dropping coverage to pre-escape levels," CSEA Unit Vice President Tom DeStephanos said. "We don't want to minimize security or see anyone get hurt because of understaffing."

The county sheriff told legislators he did not believe the jail could be operated safely at the present staffing levels.

Empty promises anger probation officers

MINEOLA — CSEA members in the Nassau County Probation Department are furious at what they call "empty promises" made by the county.

County officials had promised that newly discovered funds would be used, in part, to rehire 20 probation officers from the county's preferred list. CSEA Probation Department Unit President Jane D'Amico and CSEA Nassau County Local 830 President Rita Wallace both say the promise was to rehire 10 officers immediately and the remaining 10 in the near future.

However at a recent Board of Supervisor's meeting it was revealed the county could not transfer any funds until November. Nassau County Personnel Director George Sinnott announced that despite the layoff of 101 probation employees in February, the Probation Department was still $1.3 million in the red.

"The county is playing ping-pong with our members' lives," Wallace said. "This promise was made loud and clear to these members, the public and the news media, and now it's all turning out to be empty promises."

Freeport members protest lack of contract

FREEPORT - CSEA members in the Village of Freeport Unit of CSEA Nassau Local 850 turned out in force recently to protest working without a contract for more than a year.

More than 250 CSEA members demonstrated in front of Freeport Village Hall.

"The members showed real unity," CSEA Collective Bargaining Specialist Larry Borst said. "I think our message was heard loud and clear."

The 260-member unit of blue and white collar positions has gone to factfinding.

Pointing out that the village negotiators cancelled the last factfinding meeting and rescheduled for April, Borst said negotiators for the village are "too busy with personal ventures" to complete negotiations.

"One guy is on vacation in Florida and the other one is too busy campaigning for police commissioner," he said. "In the meantime, our members are left waiting and wondering."

Unit President Madeline Horn said the unit is simply asking for a fair and equitable contract.
ALBANY — State Sen. James Lack told CSEA political action liaisons (PALs) to keep fighting for mandatory agency shop for New York's public employees.

"Mandatory agency shop throughout the state isn't going to happen just because I think it's right or you think it's right," he said. "In order to make agency shop a reality and to have it happen by the end of the session, you're going to have to make it a non-cost priority in this year of looking at every penny."

Under agency shop, employees who chose not to join the union pay an agency shop fee, which goes toward the cost of negotiating and enforcing the contract. The union by law is obligated to represent employees who are not members. If those non-members do not pay an agency shop fee, they are "free riders," getting the benefits without contributing to the cost.

Lack, chair of the Senate Labor Committee, said agency shop is important because it ensures that everyone who benefits from union representation pays for the privilege. New York's state employees have temporary mandatory agency shop which must be renewed periodically.

Local government and school employees must negotiate for agency shop in their contracts.

Getting mandatory agency shop will be a tough battle, Lack said.

"You've got to make my colleagues understand one, that it's imperative; two, what it'll do from the standpoint of all public employees; and finally, that it's important to you as voters," he said. "You work and get support and I pledge to you that it will get brought up in our committee."

CSEA Lobbyist Tom Hartnett said he was encouraged by Lack's comments during the PALs' lobby day in Albany. Mandatory agency shop for all public employees has long been an important goal for CSEA.

Only 75 to 80 percent of CSEA's local government and school district locals have mandatory agency shop, he said.

The issue comes down to fundamental fairness: that everybody pays his or her fair share. Twenty percent of the workers enjoy all representation but are not paying one penny for that representation," Hartnett said. "I would argue that those employers who have not negotiated agency shop are not interested in negotiating it, and that's why it needs to be law."

CSEA develops infectious disease training for county employees at risk

The program provides the most up to date information available. It emphasizes that exposure to infectious disease does not mean that a person will become infected. AIDS and hepatitis A and B are transmitted through blood to blood contact or contact between bodily fluids.

AIDS transmission primarily results from unprotected sexual relations with an infected individual or sharing of hypodermic needles with an infected individual in intravenous drug use. While AIDS generally causes more concern, hepatitis is actually far more contagious and poses a greater risk for public employees.

Even health care workers can significantly reduce their risk of infection by using universal precautions. They include using gloves, goggles and other protective clothing when handling or coming in contact with blood or bodily fluid, properly disposing of infectious waste material, thoroughly washing after contact and other measures.

Tuberculosis, an air-borne disease, is more of a problem for working people than blood-borne disease. TB exposure comes from inhaling airborne bacteria from a person with active TB. The risk increases based on the length and circumstances of contact.

Tuberculosis is a treatable disease, especially if it is diagnosed early. A series of recent TB incidents have raised serious concerns about the spread of the disease and the risk for public employees.

CSEA is working with the state to ensure adequate screening and isolation programs are followed.

"There's a lot of information for people to digest and the infectious disease training provides a thorough introduction with an opportunity to ask questions," Corcoran said. "It also lets people know how they can get more information."

The program kicked off in Schenectady County recently.

"We have good in-service training programs but this infectious disease program provides a different perspective," said Jeff Zabielski, CSEA Glendale Nursing Home Unit president. "It's also very positive that labor and management participated to get that fresh approach."
UTICA - As state Medicaid reimbursements and revenue sharing to local governments decrease, county-run nursing homes are increasingly becoming targets for the budget axe by cash-strapped county governments.

CSEA workers at the Broadacres Skilled Nursing Facility in Oneida County, for example, are wondering what the future holds for them and the quality care they provide. CSEA represents about 125 workers at Broadacres, mostly in direct care positions.

Many counties, including Oneida, have been considering whether to privatize their nursing homes.

CSEA Broadacres Unit President Mary Dean, a certified nursing assistant, said that while the uncertainty is upsetting to both residents and staff, the quality of care remains "outstanding." Many people don't realize the added value of a county-operated nursing home, Dean said. Excellent programs and services at the home combine with a strong bonding between staff and residents to make it extra special, she said.

"Many of us have been here a long time and have formed attachments to many residents," Dean said. "I think of them a lot, and always try to give them extra special attention."

Dean and Shop Steward Linda Smith, an activities aide, described several programs the staff provides. For instance, over the holidays they put up a tree in the lobby and decorated it with each resident's name. Volunteers, visitors and staff were encouraged to each pick a name and bring a holiday gift to that resident. The effort was very successful, with each resident getting a gift, Smith said, and culminated in a Christmas Ball, at which the staff treated residents to a live band and refreshments. Smith also spoke about bringing in local schoolchildren for a pen-pal program, a mid-winter Hawaiian luau and a summer carnival. Taking residents to area shopping malls, movies, arts and crafts classes and religious services for three different religions are regular activities at Broadacres, she said.

Smith compared Broadacres to a private nursing home her father had been in which she said was simply "not as nice."

"For a nursing home, we have excellent care here," she said. Others, including resident Celia Carroll and her daughter, Ann Staple, agreed completely.

"I couldn't ask for better," Carroll said. "I wouldn't want to go anywhere else."

"They have been super-great to her here," Staple added. "I have nothing but praise for the staff."

Staple also wrote a letter for the facility's employee newsletter to help raise awareness in the community of the value of the county-run home. In her letter, Staple told of the huge improvements in her mother's health since she arrived.

When she came to Broadacres, Carroll weighed only 82 pounds, couldn't walk and ate very little. Now, after about seven months, Carroll is up to 106 pounds, is walking with a walker and is learning to go up and down stairs, eats "most everything" and even goes to bingo games.

Because of her improvement, Carroll was able to go home for Christmas and enjoy spending time with her grandchildren, Staple said.

Dean is proud of the work that she and her fellow workers do, and she hopes the rest of the community realizes it, she said. Privatization could mean that people who need treatment might be turned away and that the quality of care might decrease.

"If it goes private," she said, "I don't see a lot of future for these people."

PUBLIC VS. PRIVATE NURSING HOMES:

One big difference is

Tender, loving care
