GE Wants To Be Loved—Yet!

The latest Business Week little is a reminder of employees’ relationship to their employer. It seems to be the theme of the month. In one case, a worker turned down a raise of $1 per week. In another, an employee declined a promotion. In both cases, the worker was offered a better job elsewhere. The employer is not happy. In the first case, the worker was offered a job in another city. In the second case, the worker was offered a job at a higher salary. In both cases, the employer feels that the worker is taking advantage of the situation.

GE is not the only company that is facing this problem. In fact, it is a problem that is common in many industries. Workers are not as satisfied as they once were with their jobs. They are looking for better opportunities elsewhere. This is causing a problem for companies that want to keep their employees.

The solution to this problem is not clear. Some companies are offering better salaries and benefits to keep their employees. Others are offering more flexible work schedules. Still others are offering more opportunities for advancement. It will take some time to see which approach is the most effective.

The lesson to be learned from this is that companies need to be more responsive to their employees’ needs. They need to offer opportunities for growth and development. They need to provide a safe and healthy work environment. They need to offer a competitive salary and benefits. Companies that do not do these things risk losing their best employees to competitors.

In the meantime, companies need to be aware of the problem and take steps to address it. They need to be proactive in their approach to employee retention. They need to be responsive to their employees’ needs. They need to be committed to their employees’ well-being.

The lesson to be learned from this is that companies need to be more responsive to their employees’ needs. They need to offer opportunities for growth and development. They need to provide a safe and healthy work environment. They need to offer a competitive salary and benefits. Companies that do not do these things risk losing their best employees to competitors.

In the meantime, companies need to be aware of the problem and take steps to address it. They need to be proactive in their approach to employee retention. They need to be responsive to their employees’ needs. They need to be committed to their employees’ well-being.

The lesson to be learned from this is that companies need to be more responsive to their employees’ needs. They need to offer opportunities for growth and development. They need to provide a safe and healthy work environment. They need to offer a competitive salary and benefits. Companies that do not do these things risk losing their best employees to competitors.

In the meantime, companies need to be aware of the problem and take steps to address it. They need to be proactive in their approach to employee retention. They need to be responsive to their employees’ needs. They need to be committed to their employees’ well-being.
General Electric's Double Standard

Nothing is Too Good For The American Woman... Unless She Works For GE!

Then, She Is Paid Less Than Common Labor And Gets Less Than Men Doing The Same Jobs.

According to the New York State Labor Department, women workers make only 65 cents for every dollar earned by men. A study by the Women's Bureau of the U.S. Department of Labor showed that in 1951, women workers earned an average of 64 cents for every dollar earned by men. This is a shocking revelation and one that should be of concern to all of us.

The Double Standard

The double standard that exists in the workplace affects every aspect of a woman's life. From the moment she enters the workforce, she is faced with discrimination and lower pay. This is not just an issue for women workers; it affects all women, regardless of their occupation.

In conclusion, we must work together to eliminate the double standard and ensure that all women are treated equally in the workplace. It is time for change and for us to stand up for what is right. Thank you.