Miner's Son in Congress Calls for Repeal of T-H

The son of a West Virginia coal miner last week spearheaded what appeared to be a desperate last-gasp struggle for repeal of the T-H Act. In Congress. Rep. Robert C. Byrd, D-W. Va., a powerful labor spokesman, appeared as a witness before the House labor committee and attacked T-H, saying, "Mined out an atmosphere of anti-unionism, reactionism and fear. If the T-H Act is not repealed, a cancer is in a frame of mine".

Byrd was himself a miner for 10 years before becoming an attorney and then a man of politics. He described, "My family worked with my friends in the mine. My folks and I are family spokesman for the families in the coal industry."

The T-H Act, a federal anti-union law, was a response to the U.S. Steel strike of 1980-81. It was designed to prevent secondary picketing, a tactic used by miners to support each other in the face of shutdowns or layoffs. The act limited the right of miners to strike and made it easier for employers to replace striking workers.

Byrd's appearance before the committee was a dramatic moment. He spoke passionately about the plight of miners and the need to repeal the act. His testimony was met with a standing ovation from the committee members.

The T-H Act was a part of the larger anti-union movement in America in the 1980s and 1990s. It was supported by many Republicans and some Democrats, and it had the backing of powerful corporations and lobby groups.

Despite Byrd's efforts, the T-H Act was not repealed during this session of Congress. However, it remains a target for labor and union activists, who continue to fight for its repeal in future sessions of Congress.

---

Question and Answer Corner

Question: Why is it important to support local unions?

Answer: Supporting local unions is important because they work to improve the lives of workers by advocating for better wages, safer working conditions, and stronger protections against discrimination. Unions also help to keep companies accountable by ensuring that they follow fair labor standards. By joining a union, workers have a voice in their workplace and can help to build a stronger, more just society for all.

Question: What is the role of a union organizer?

Answer: A union organizer is someone who helps to build and maintain local unions. They work to recruit new members, train them on union rights and protections, and help to negotiate contracts with employers. Union organizers also work to ensure that the union's goals are being met, by enforcing labor laws and representing workers in labor disputes.

Question: How does a union negotiate a contract with an employer?

Answer: When a union and an employer enter into contract negotiations, they work to reach an agreement that benefits both parties. The union represents the employees' interests, while the employer represents the company's interests. During the negotiations, both sides present their proposals and arguments, and try to find a compromise that meets their needs. The final agreement is then put to a vote by the union membership, and if it is approved, the contract becomes binding on both the union and the employer.

---

Electrical Union News

Stewards Start Schooling

UE To Begin Reopen Talks With Company on Thursday

UE negotiations are expected to open talks aimed at getting a general wage increase, elimination of discriminatory practices and obtaining payments for injuries caused by the company. For UE members and UE supporters, the outcome of these talks will be watched closely. The UE local in the area has been active in recent negotiations, and it is expected that the company will make a significant offer to the union.

Stress Discrimination Danger to All Workers

The danger of discrimination to every worker is one that every UE member must be aware of. The company should avoid any form of discrimination, including sexual harassment, racial or ethnic discrimination, or any form of workplace discrimination. The UE is dedicated to ensuring a workplace where all workers are treated fairly and equally.

---

Attention 100% Mark at First Session

UE Local 99 shop stewards led the way to new gains in the area that will be in the bargaining process for the upcoming negotiations. The gains include a wage increase for qualified workers, a new health plan with better coverage, and improvements to the company's safety program. The UE local is proud of the gains made and looks forward to continuing the negotiations to improve working conditions for all workers.

---

Class Schedule

UE Local 99 has announced a new class schedule for the upcoming semester. The classes will cover a range of topics, including safety, health, and labor law. The schedule is designed to meet the needs of all UE members, and it is available online for download. The UE local is dedicated to providing high-quality education and training to its members, and it looks forward to seeing everyone in the upcoming classes.
Durkin Group Meets to Plan Amendments to Taft-Hartley

A 15-member committee of top labor, industry and the public met this week under the chairmanship of Labor Secretary Martin P. Durkin. In an effort to reach agreement on amendments to the Taft-Hartley law, the committee met in a cable-car meeting, which took place in the Taft-Hartley law. In answering a question of the T-Bil Board Chief Seeks New Union Frame League.

\[\text{Durkin Group Meets to Plan Amendments to Taft-Hartley} \]

\[\text{A 15-member committee of top labor, industry and the public met this week under the chairmanship of Labor Secretary Martin P. Durkin. In an effort to reach agreement on amendments to the Taft-Hartley law, the committee met in a cable-car meeting, which took place in the Taft-Hartley law. In answering a question of the T-Bil Board Chief Seeks New Union Frame League.}\]