Company Delays Signing Contract

Negotiations on the GE-US contract have been delayed because the company wants to make last-minute changes which would weaken the national contract in certain areas. This does not delay efficiency of the wage formula, the six paid holidays and other improvements covered in the supplementary agreement which has already been signed. Pay raises were scheduled to be included in the pay checks distributed yesterday and today. This week's issue of UE News went to press however, before the changes were given out.

The national UE officers have called the union's negotiating committee to New York for a meeting Tuesday. The negotiations will continue with GE officials Wednesday. The union hopes the contract can be signed in the same session.

All stages of the negotiations are being watched closely by the negotiating committees and other UE officers. The changes in the agreement are expected to delay the settlement of the dispute.

No Need for Worry

GE Won't Send Disputed Cases To Arbitration

The General Electric Company's first attempt to comply with the union's contract for arbitration of grievances was referred this week by the Local 301 Executive Board to the Schenectady union's arbitration committee. At a grievance meeting Tuesday, James W. Barlow, who represents the company, and Les J. Haise, who represents the union, agreed to submit the case to arbitration.

The company's refusal to submit cases to arbitration was noted by the union's grievance committee. The union members were surprised by the company's decision and decided to submit the case to arbitration.

The case will be referred to the union's grievance committee for further action. The union members will have the opportunity to discuss the case with the company and the union's representatives.
