Company's Boast That It Voluntarily Grants Compensation Benefits Contradicted by Record

In the Works News of June 28, 1927, the Company boasted that it started payment of Workmen's Compensation benefits voluntarily in 1922 out of 105 men. The left two cases in which the Company failed to pay benefits immediately are cases of very small claims on the part of the employee who did not ask for them. The Toolroom is over 600 to 700 men but the Company has not yet paid a single benefit.

Injured Worker and Medical Treatment

The injured worker takes it for granted that he is entitled to any necessary medical treatment at the Company's expense if injured whilst at work.

During the period immediately following an accident treatment is rendered and paid for by the Company. Treatment is given during this period at the sole discretion of the Company without any appeal to the workers' benefit society or a union. In ordinary cases if the injured person requires medical treatment, the cost of the same is borne by the Company. In serious cases, the cost of the same is borne by the Company and the treatment is rendered free of charge to the injured person.

A different situation arises, however, when over a considerable length of time treatment in still being rendered and the Company is still being billed for treatment. In many instances the Company requires the injured person to be examined by one of its own physicians in order to determine whether they should continue any further treatment at their expense. In order words, if the injury is not confined to examining the worker, informs the Company that treatment is not necessary, the Company has the right to, and often chooses, the payment of any further medical bills.

Such a challenge is felt quite often in cases where treatment has been given for a longer period of time. However, the challenge is met by the Company, the latter agreeing to pay the medical bills for the treatment given during the period of treatment required by the Injured Worker. If the treatment is required, the medical bills are paid by the Company, but if the treatment is not required, the medical bills are not paid by the Company.

More Millionaires

Between 1953 and 1954, the number of millionaires jumped 30 per cent, mainly because of the tax cut voted by Congress during 1953. Between 1955 and 1956, the number of millionaires increased from one million to one million and a half. This increase continued until 1957 when the number of millionaires reached 20 million. The 1958 estimate for the number of millionaires in the United States is approximately 40 million. The 1959 estimate is approximately 50 million.
