$50,000 to Steelworkers

BY JUNE E. FOLEY

The IUE Local 301 News, reporting that Steelworkers and Steel members in New York State, took the following action in the strike settlements reached on October 31, 1971, in a hardhitting New York City labor organization. The IUE Local 301 News reported that an agreement was reached with the management of the IUE Union to end the strike that had lasted for nearly two months. The agreement was reached after a series of meetings and negotiations between the union and the management. The agreement included a new contract for the workers that included a wage increase for the workers. The union had been demanding a wage increase for several months, and the management had been reluctant to grant the increase. The agreement was signed by both parties, and the workers were informed that they would receive the new contract in the next few days. The union had been active in the community, and they had been holding meetings to inform the workers of their rights and the progress of the negotiations. The union had also been involved in other strikes, and they had been successful in some of them. The management had been fighting the strikes, and they had been trying to weaken the unions. The agreement was a step forward for the workers, and it showed that the union was strong and could negotiate effectively. The workers were happy with the agreement, and they were looking forward to a better future. The union had been active in the community, and they had been holding meetings to inform the workers of their rights and the progress of the negotiations. The union had also been involved in other strikes, and they had been successful in some of them. The management had been fighting the strikes, and they had been trying to weaken the unions. The agreement was a step forward for the workers, and it showed that the union was strong and could negotiate effectively. The workers were happy with the agreement, and they were looking forward to a better future.