GE Price Policy and Propaganda

The General Electric Company's price policy is to charge what the market will bear. It recognizes increased prices to pay higher wages. It has made a plea for a 25 percent reduction in wages in order to permit increases in wages. It has also called on the industry to do its part to lower costs.

GE is a representative of the American Electric Companies, which is a group of companies that operates electric power plants and transmits electricity.

GE Says People Have Too Much

GE has been the focus of much attention in recent years. The company, which had been criticized for its high stock prices, announced plans to reduce its workforce, which is the highest in the United States. The company's new managers are trying to improve its performance by reducing costs and increasing efficiency. The company has also been working on new technologies, which could help it remain competitive in the future.

Meeting on Silosism Arranged with GE

The GE management was in touch with the managers of the company. They discussed the company's future plans and strategies. The company's managers were also in touch with the management of the local government. They discussed the company's plans to expand its operations and the impact of the company's operations on the local economy.
