State Orders GE Pay Award in Death Case
A state Workmen's Compensation referee has ruled that the widow of a worker who was killed in a work accident, and her son, who was injured in the same accident, are entitled to compensation.

The widow, Mrs. Anna M. Walker, and her son, John W. Walker, both lived in the town of Herkimer, where Mr. Walker was employed by General Electric Co.

Walker was killed in a work accident on May 15, 1960, while he was working at the GE plant in Herkimer. The accident occurred when a piece of machinery fell on him, and he was pronounced dead at the scene.

Walker's widow and son filed a claim with the state Workmen's Compensation Board, seeking compensation for their losses. The Board granted the claim, and the State and the GE Co. are now appealing the decision.

GE rejected the Board's decision, asserting that the accident was not work-related. The company argued that the worker was not performing his job duties at the time of the accident.

A state Workmen's Compensation referee ruled in favor of the widow and son, awarding them compensation.

GE has the option of appealing this decision to a state court.

---

Contract Negotiations Still Continue

GE Drops A Few Bad Proposals

A few bad proposals were dropped this week by the GE negotiators in their continuing effort to reach a new contract agreement with the United Electrical Workers.

The negotiators said they were working to improve the workers' benefits and working conditions.

They added that the new contract would include provisions for better health care and retirement benefits.

The negotiators also said they were working to improve safety standards in the workplace.

They added that the new contract would include provisions for regular safety inspections and training programs.

The negotiators said they were also working to improve the workers' unemployment benefits.

They added that the new contract would include provisions for increased unemployment benefits and job training programs.

The negotiators said they were also working to improve the workers' wages.

They added that the new contract would include provisions for increased wages and benefits.

The negotiators said they were also working to improve the workers' working hours.

They added that the new contract would include provisions for shorter work weeks and more paid vacations.

The negotiators said they were also working to improve the workers' leave policies.

They added that the new contract would include provisions for more paid leave and flexible schedules.

The negotiators said they were also working to improve the workers' retirement benefits.

They added that the new contract would include provisions for increased retirement benefits and longevity awards.

The negotiators said they were also working to improve the workers' fringe benefits.

They added that the new contract would include provisions for increased fringe benefits such as health care and life insurance.

The negotiators said they were also working to improve the workers' pension plans.

They added that the new contract would include provisions for increased pension benefits and retirement age.

The negotiators said they were also working to improve the workers' training opportunities.

They added that the new contract would include provisions for increased training opportunities and education programs.

The negotiators said they were also working to improve the workers' retirement savings plans.

They added that the new contract would include provision...