301 Members Ask Repeal of Taft-Hartley

According to reports from all corners of the country, the workers are expressing intense feelings against the Taft-Hartley Act. Many workers feel that the act is a violation of their basic rights and that it is preventing them from organizing and striking to improve their working conditions. The act is seen as a threat to the democratic process and a betrayal of the workers' trust in their government. The workers are demanding the immediate repeal of the act and are calling for a new labor law that will protect their rights and interests.

First in Line for FDR Christmas Trees

On the eve of Christmas, the workers are lined up outside the White House to receive their FDR Christmas trees. The trees are donated by the workers and are a symbol of their gratitude to the president for his leadership during the Depression. The workers are eager to receive their trees and are excited to decorate them with ornaments and lights. The trees are a reminder of the workers' resilience and their determination to build a better future for themselves and their families.

Election Report on Shop Stewards

The Shop Steward is a key figure in the labor movement, serving as the link between the workers and management. The election of shop stewards is an important democratic process that ensures the workers' right to self-organization. The election was held in the workplace and was supervised by the National Labor Relations Board. The results showed a clear victory for the workers, who were able to elect their own representatives to fight for their rights and interests. The election was a symbol of the workers' power and their determination to build a stronger labor movement.
Congressman Proposes That GE Run Marshall Plant; GE Chairman Willing

At a Congresses hearing at the National Press Club today, Rep. resentatives John M. Vorys, Ohio Democrat, suggested that the plan be considered by a group; "I saw what could be done at the plant.

On the farm and in the plant, we could do it." Mr. Vorys is a member of the House Small Business Committee.

The GE plant in Oak Park, Ill., was shut down last week, after a strike by workers there. The plant had been operated by GE for 40 years, but it had been losing money for several years.

"We are going to run this plant at a loss of $3 million per year," Mr.

Vorys said. "But if we can run it profitably and generate electricity, we can save jobs and help the local economy." Mr. Vorys said he would work with GE to find a solution.

Dreaming of a Taft-Hartley Christmas?

"Tis the season to be jolly... and to dream of a Taft-Hartley Christmas," writes the author of this article.

"The spirit of Taft-Hartley is alive and well in the halls of Congress," she writes. "A sense of optimism and possibility permeates the air as we look forward to a brighter future."
