Unemployment Insurance Law Changes

A number of changes in the Unemployment Insurance Law take effect on July 1, 1951. Some of them will be discussed here.

In the first place, the right to unemployment benefits after July 1 depends on the amount of money you earned before an order was issued, not principally on how long you worked in the 26 weeks before filing your claim. The only requirement is that you must have been unemployed for three weeks out of the four weeks before the finding of the claim.

Second, each worker is entitled to unemployment benefits of up to $30 a week for a maximum of 26 weeks, instead of 20 weeks, and each worker must file for benefits within five days of the week in which he loses his job.

With these changes, the claimant is now required to pay back one week of unemployment benefits in the case of a work stoppage within the period of employment, or for a period of less than three weeks, in the case of a work stoppage beyond the period of employment.
