LEADERSHIP RESPONSIBILITY

Organized labor has never entered into a new cycle and the leadership must adapt itself to this change.

The first essential shape of the most militant workers come forward and become the natural leaders of their group. After the strike is over or has been established, that the leader must settle down to his responsibilities in serving his group. He must become thoroughly acquainted with every job under his jurisdiction, in order to correctly present a problem to the superiors. Furthermore, the leader must be entirely at home with the existing collective bargaining agreement in order to evaluate his group problem in relation to the plant as a whole.

This is the greatest importance becomes a responsibility should always be in mind and it might be said the supervision of the union is as vital to the union's continued existence as it is to the employer.

The cooperation of all concerned is necessary for the success of any collective bargaining agreement. It is the responsibility of both the union and management to ensure that the agreement is not only understood but also respected by all employees.

In conclusion, the success of a collective bargaining agreement is dependent on the willingness of both parties to work together for the benefit of all.

In New York Area

In the New York area, the United Mine Workers of America have gained several significant victories in recent months.

The most notable of these victories was the settlement of the Strike of the United Mine Workers in the state of New York.

The strike began in February and lasted for several months, but was eventually resolved in June with the signing of a new contract.

The new contract includes several important provisions, including increased wages and improved working conditions for the miners.

In addition to the New York victory, the United Mine Workers have also made progress in other areas, including settlements with coal companies in Pennsylvania and West Virginia.

These victories demonstrate the strength of the United Mine Workers and their commitment to fighting for the rights of workers.
