BUT, ONCE AGAIN, ONLY A small portion of eligible voters went to the polls.

BUT, ONCE AGAIN, ONLY A small portion of eligible voters went to the polls.

This time, the candidate who won was Norman Novak. He ran a strong campaign and was able to win the election with a majority of votes.

The winning candidate, Norm Novak, immediately attributed his victory to the support of organized labor. In truth, Novak did not have the support of organized labor, and in fact his entire campaign was in direct conflict with labor’s position of what this country’s educational program should be.

The position of all labor groups — and most importantly the largest of them all, the International AFL-CIO — is that we must have higher and better educational standards; that educational standards should not be sacrificed in the saving of a few dollars.

Mr. Novak supported the AFL-CIO position and, thus, won the endorsement of Local 301, the area AFL-CIO council, the Hotel & Restaurant Workers and the Independent Federation of Teachers, among other groups. Novak, on the other hand, worked against the position of the AFL-CIO.

Mr. Novak was the only candidate who ran a campaign that focused on the improvement of the educational system and the needs of the students.

But, of course, everyone likes the promise of tax cuts — even tho' they may be impossible to carry out or even if they are impractical. Unfortunately, when a candidate for public office promises tax cuts, some voters buy this pie-in-the-sky pot of gold at the end of the rainbow without stopping to think of just what a small tax raising would mean in terms of weakening our public school system.

This was the issue in Tuesday's election: Quality education vs. educational cutbacks at a savings of pennies.

Unfortunately, the penny-pincher won the day.

This election marked the first time Local 301 had waged an active and aggressive campaign in a city-wide election.
