Schenechady Papers Really Go to Town

As expected, the two Schenechady papers really went to town on the charges against Local 301 membership charges. The two papers obviously were engaged in a propaganda campaign to support Rep. Congressman Drumm and to discredit the organizing committee. The papers were not afraid to go all out in their attacks on the organizing committee.

Rail Unions’ Paper Hits Atomic Group

Two articles analyzing the labor policy of the Atomic Energy Commission were recently published by the Hill. The articles highlight the challenges faced by rail unions in negotiating with the commission.

The first article discusses the impact of the Atomic Energy Act on labor unions. It argues that the act has led to a loss of members and revenue for the unions. The article also raises concerns about the safety and health of workers exposed to radiation.

The second article examines the role of the Atomic Energy Commission in shaping labor policies. It claims that the commission’s actions have undermined the ability of unions to negotiate for the rights of their members.
