GE Double Dealing
Aim to Aid Carey

The General Electric Company last week made two major moves to aid the Carey Administration: first, it suspended plans for the 150,000-man United Steelworkers of America (USWA) strike, and second, it announced a $50,000,000 loan to the United States for use in the construction of a new steel mill in New Jersey.

The USWA strike, which had been scheduled to begin on May 2, was called off after the USWA and the company reached an agreement on wages and working conditions. The strike was planned as a protest against the company's proposed new steel mill in New Jersey, which was expected to replace older, less efficient mills in the area.

The loan to the US government was announced as a way to help finance the construction of the new steel mill. The loan will be used to purchase equipment and pay for construction costs.

What, Again?

GE Wins Election At Globe Forge

The General Electric Company's election of the United Steelworkers of America (USWA) as the exclusive bargaining agent for its employees has set off another round of labor disputes.

The USWA, which represents approximately 1 million workers in the United States, has been a major union in the labor movement for many years. It has a long history of successful organizing drives and strike actions, and is known for its strong bargaining positions.

The GE election, which was held at the Globe Forge in New York City, was conducted by the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB). The NLRB is an independent federal agency responsible for enforcing federal labor laws.

The GE election was held on April 1st, and the results were announced on April 2nd. The USWA was defeated by a narrow margin, with 52% of the votes cast for the GE company union and 48% for the USWA.

The GE company union, which is known as the Electrical Workers' Union (EWU), has a long history of working with GE, and has an established record of successful bargaining. The USWA, on the other hand, has faced numerous challenges in its efforts to organize new industries and gain recognition in existing ones.

The GE election has raised concerns about the future of the labor movement in the United States. Many experts believe that the GE election is a key test of the strength of the USWA and its ability to organize new industries and gain recognition in existing ones.

The results of the GE election will be closely watched by labor leaders and activists across the country. The election is seen as a bellwether of the direction of the labor movement in the United States, and will be used as evidence of the strength of the USWA and its ability to organize new industries and gain recognition in existing ones.

Answers for GE Workers

Q. Will there be an NLRB vote in this plant?
A. Yes. The US and UE have signed an agreement that an NLRB vote will be held, and the company has agreed to support the vote.

Q. When will the NLRB vote be held?
A. The vote will be held within the next two weeks, according to the agreement.

Q. What is UE's position on the NLRB vote?
A. UE is in favor of the NLRB vote, as it will give workers an opportunity to freely express their preference for representation.

Q. Since GE and the "UE" both have asked for elections, and UE has proposed a recess vote, what's the likelihood of a settlement?
A. The likelihood of a settlement depends on several factors, including the outcome of the NLRB vote. If UE wins the vote, GE is more likely to consider a settlement. If GE wins, UE is likely to continue the strike.

Company Reneges On New Checkoff

General Electric canceled the checkoff contract that they had agreed to last week, citing the NLRB vote as a reason. UE is planning to go to court to enforce the checkoff, saying that it is a violation of the contract.

New Shop Stewards Will Meet Tuesday

The new shop stewards will meet Tuesday to discuss their role in the strike. The stewards are expected to develop strategies to better organize and support the workers.

Big UE Victory At Sunbeam Plants

Workers at the St. Paul, Minnesota, and the Sunbeam Plants won a major victory last week. The workers successfully negotiated a new contract that included a $1.50 increase in wages and other improvements. The union members are pleased with the outcome and hope for more victories in the future.

15 Cent Increase

A new checkoff at Kaleva, Ohio, has led to a new 15 cent increase in wages. This is the first increase in wages for workers in the Kaleva area in many years, and they are pleased with the outcome.

Too Much Party

The UE Checkoff Committee has been working hard to ensure that the contract is enforced and that workers are getting the full benefits of their new contract. They are planning a party to celebrate the victory and thank the workers for their hard work.
