FACTS vs. FICTION

Women Rates’ Arguments Exploded

Way companion fight to keep rate difference between men and women in the United States is a political one, as evidenced by the recent events in Illinois. The state has passed a law that would allow women to earn more than men for the same work, a move that has sparked controversy and debate.

The state of Illinois has been at the forefront of this issue, with several laws recently passed that aim to address wage disparities. One such law, the Fair Pay Act, went into effect in 2020 and prohibits employers from paying different rates to employees of the same gender for the same work. However, the law has faced challenges in implementation and enforcement.

The debate over gender pay equity is ongoing, with advocates and opponents of the Fair Pay Act having different perspectives on its effectiveness and implications. Some argue that the law is necessary to ensure fairness and equality in the workplace, while others believe it could have unintended consequences and stifle economic growth.

In the meantime, the fight for equal pay continues, with groups and organizations working to raise awareness and advocate for change. The issue of gender pay equity is complex and multifaceted, and it will likely remain a topic of discussion for years to come.
Boulware Tips His Hand, He's Against All Unions

The only way for a union to avoid being red-baited is for it to keep silent, according to a statement this week by the editor of the union's newsletter. Mr. Boulware, who heads the newsletter, said he received the unspoken warning during a brief conversation with a union official. The union official, who was representing a chapter of the United Mine Workers, said he had been told that the union would not tolerate any criticism of the administration.

'301' Aids UE's Drive At Two GE Plants

A GE employee at the GE Works in Zelienople, Pennsylvania, has been sent to the company's plant in Schenectady, New York, to help organize union members. The employee, who was hired by the union last month, has been working with the local United Steelworkers Union to gain support for the union's efforts to organize the plant.

GE 'Public Opinion' Poll Gets Stacked Answers

GE recently asked what it thinks of GE and came up with the news that GE is a good company. The survey was conducted by the National Public Affairs Council, a company that specializes in survey research. The poll was carefully controlled to ensure that all the respondents were asked the same questions and that the answers were not influenced by the survey's purpose or the respondents' knowledge of the survey. However, the results of the poll were not representative of the general public and are not a reliable measure of public opinion.

Wage Freeze Stays As Prices Go Up

Staples are going to have to face the same problem that their families did on the rise of the latest inflation. The union officials at the St. Louis office of the Steelworkers Union, the government officials at the steel mills, the company officials at the mills and the company officials at the mills are all getting the same message: The wage freeze is still in effect, and prices are going up.

Humphrey's Senate Buddy Introduces Anti-Labor Bill

The Senate has introduced a new bill that would prevent the National Labor Relations Board from taking action against companies that violate the law. The bill was introduced by Senator Robert Byrd, a Democrat from West Virginia, and co-sponsored by Senator William Proxmire, a Democrat from Wisconsin.

Red Cross Blood Plan Recommended

The Red Cross plans to test a new blood donation plan this summer. The plan, which is still under development, would allow donors to give blood a few times a year instead of every three months. The plan is expected to be tested in the summer and fall of 1982.
