White Students: Insensitive and Blind

An ASP Column
by Maggie Griffith

Where in the world are all these white students hiding? It’s time to ask students of other races to speak up against the insensitivity they see. When was the last time you heard of a black student speaking up for himself or herself? It’s time we face the facts about how white students are acting on campus.

Is there a need to re-examine the idea that black students are not as interested in or involved in student affairs? The answer is yes. It’s time to ask white students to take a harder look at themselves and their actions.

The proposed SA Constitution:

Executive Overlord

by Bob Staton

The proposed constitution of Student Association is in general, democratic—minority in proportion to the representation involved. In theory, then, there is no limit to the legislature or judicial branch, but with the executive, where the constitution, which will be voted on this Thursday evening, by Central Council.

Under Section II, the President has the right to recommend to the Central Council, with the executive branch, the selection of committee members. Under this constitution, the President has the right to receive or deny the recommendation for any reason he sees fit, which is the reason for his having the power to constitute the policies and procedures of the majority of the Council, as he sees fit, which is patronage, a most powerful weapon for any president.

The proposed constitution, should it pass Central Council, will also make it easy for him to appoint EOP students, while all other of the Central Council will be appointed by the President and a majority of the members of the decentralization committee. Investigation: Who Is ‘Tommy the Traveler’?

The following account of the Scranton Commission Report on Campus Delinquency, in particular, Robert College and Understanding, is based on a series of personal interviews conducted in the fall of 1970 by the author. The report contains an extensive and comprehensive analysis of the various aspects of campus delinquency, including the role of student leaders, the impact of the media, and the effects of socioeconomic factors. It is a valuable resource for anyone interested in understanding the complexities of campus life.

Albany has two main public housing projects. They are the Morton Ave. project near Lincoln Park and the Thatcher project closer to the river. Residents experience the problems common to many housing projects: crime and inefficient service. A third project planned for below the Mall was cancelled due to costs.

Albany has many very nice sections of private one-family homes. Low taxes and generally high employment are drawing factors to the city. The population has been stable for about 50 years but may grow soon if the Pine Bush area (by Washington Ave. Extension) is developed.

CITY OF ALBANY

words by mike ellis

In 1965 plans were first made for a new Albany High to be completed by 1969. Today the piling are in the ground and the last scheduled date of completion given was September, 1973. Because of the extraordinarily high projected costs which are not feasible due to the limits of the city's borrowing power the entire project is under study. There is some doubt as to how large a school is needed. This results from the precarious financial position of the city Catholic's high schools.

The state office campus was built to house the state offices in the early 1960's. It has turned out to be only Phase I of Rockefeller's local building program, shadowed by the upcoming Mall. The state government is the largest state employee, providing a solid, expanding base to the job situation.

The Capitol and Education Building. New space for expansion of both facilities are in the Mall. Both buildings were air-conditioned during the 60's which greatly spruced up the area.

Many people have moved back to the area around the Capitol and Washington Park. A neighborhood association has been formed to keep up the area's private homes rather than apartments. Many of the buildings are over a century old.

Washington Park was once the tranquil heart of the upper city of Albany. There were outdoor concerts in the summer, Sunday strolls and fishing and boating in the lake.

Today the park is used by older people in the vicinity, the large group of college students living nearby, and some school children. But family use is very small, as most young families who can afford to, move away.

State Street is the heart of the city. It is now mostly devoted to banking, insurance, law and business offices. The adjacent shopping district is holding on in hopes of prosperity when the thousands of State Mall workers come.

Against Communism, the Libertarians were more concerned about whether the Government had the right to use force and consent to its citizens in order to understand an individual's views. As I understand it, it was that freedom to which I am working for." For me, it is the right to think out loud and volunteer our services to the world.

Judicial Workshop

By John Fairchild

Hacking your way through a jungle may not sound like fun, but that's exactly what the Judicial Workshop did this past weekend.

During the weekend, students, faculty, and administrators engaged in the "game" of relationships that constitute the university's community. Their goal was to provide a basic line of effective judicial systems at Albany State.

The workshop covered various topics such as, the structure of a judicial system. The system as it stands does not clearly state several existing actions, including:

1. who may report a crime;
2. to whom the citizen should be reported (i.e., a particular judicial body or personnel);
3. when an accused should be heard;
4. upon conviction, what punishment should follow, with what particularization of action.

Several members of the weekend felt that a system of crimes that had been committed should be outlined, and also, the system should be able to handle crimes that fall outside the jurisdiction of state and local systems.

Workshop participants reached an agreement on the applicability of a judicial system. It was felt that such a body should have a right to be able to hold the behavior of its members. Conviction was not intended to be a free form of justice and what was considered unfair by the system was felt that all that was done by "necessary steps." Judicial systems should be able to determine the sentences of convicted offenders.

The major issue was the question is not whether there will be a judicial system, but through what channels and in what manner it should be organized or the arrangements for the operation of the judicial system. It was agreed that the judicial system should deal with the legal aspects of the college's policies and procedures, and in some cases it may be better that the law is comprehended by the system.

A few members of the workshop felt that victims of crimes should be present in the system and would be able to participate in the process of determining the sentences of convicted offenders.
