How can a lasting peace in Asia be secured?

By Dr. John D. Masters

Dr. Masters is in the midst of a revolutionary period in Asia, a period of change and transformation. The most important question is how to secure a lasting peace in Asia.

The U.S. has played a significant role in the region, and there is a need for the U.S. to continue to engage with the region in a constructive manner. The U.S. should work towards a peaceful resolution of the conflicts in the region and support the efforts of the Asian countries to promote stability and prosperity.

Dr. Masters also discussed the role of the United Nations in the region, and the importance of the UN in providing a platform for dialogue and cooperation among the countries of Asia.

There will be an organizational meeting of the PYAAC described below.

Thanks

The basketballed team and “Doc”View’s to express their thanks to the Albany student body for its enthusiastic support throughout the season, and, most of all, for its intense support during the BJAC whooping.

We pick up the story of basketball at the center, that is, when the championship was in the Air.

The audience, composed of public and students, reflected the political and social energies in this past week's activities. For the blacks and the public have altered their objects of interests. For the blacks and the public have altered their objects of interests.

On Tuesday afternoon and Wednesday morning, suggestions have been made that a teach-in be organized to coordinate activities on this campus. Suggestions have been made that a teach-in be organized to coordinate activities on this campus.

The audience, composed of public and students, has about vanished. Both groups previously of public and student interests, the students to the Establishment, the blacks to the Oppressors. The black switch was most sharply after the death of M.L. King; the student switch, too the atudents have shifted their interests in another field: who today writes about the blacks and the white man, who today writes about the blacks and the white man.

Half fare dilemma

To the Editors:

We are of the opinion that you and your readers are about to lose their privilege to half fare.

For some time, practically everyone in the country has been accustomed to half fare being available to students, because of the National Student Marketing Corporation. For this reason, we suggest that you alert our students to the situation.

We the students of the SUNY at Albany are deeply interested in the situation here.

Very best regards,

Charles W. Radulich

Double Opa!

To the Editors:

With regard to the editorial of Friday, February 28, we recommend that you reconsider your position on this issue.

We believe that the proposal for a double Opa is not in the best interest of the students.

We would like to emphasize that the issue is not about the number of Opas but about the quality of education.

Respectfully,

Becky Johnson

The edward dorel part: the story part 1

If we are to seek a meaningful education in which the sciences and humanities are blended in the proper mix of teaching and learning, we are not necessarily a minority of the student population. All students, regardless of major, should be involved in the humanities.

Press Freedom

SUNY's Board of Trustees has proposed a policy statement that would restrict the free flow of information to all news media to any campus event that is student-related.

In other words, when the general public (students and the Albany community) is interested in an event on campus, the public is not allowed to know about it.

The idea is to prevent the free flow of information to all news media to any campus event that is student-related.

From past experience, we know that student activities on this campus have always been open to the public.

If the press can be discriminating in its coverage of campus events, it will result in a decrease of campus activities that are not in the public's interest.

To the Editors:

We are of the opinion that the press should be free to cover all campus events.

We believe that the press should be free to cover all campus events.

We would like to see the press have access to all campus events.
