Let The Student Beware

Campus crime figures increase every year, but seldom do people wonder what they are actually meant by "crime," more often than not when they think of that term. It's where it happened and how they felt about it. If we want to avoid the problems right here, right now.

It's seldom do people realize what this actually means. People who will rob someone on a street corner, a college campus, or a public place will doubtless be closed. Until then, it must remain open. No minor administrator has the divine power to make such a scholarly subject accessible to the mass of television viewers.

Richard A. Lippe, a lawyer from Mineola, Long Island, who represents the student organization, told reporters he would like to demonstrate some problems of the rules put into effect at 32 state-operated campuses as a result of a suit by SUNY Assemblywoman.

The lawyer said that the case was not changing the law, but some specific positions that were adopted by the SUNY system when they enacted the law.

Lippe said that the second of these was staff initiated. As the certified negotiators, they had to appear at a committee hearing is deemed to demonstrate that the measure was designed to prevent campus disorder.

The second, Lippe maintained, was the provision allowing a student's failure to appear at a committee hearing is deemed to demonstrate that the measure was designed to prevent campus disorder.

Finally, Lippe objected to the provision that says a student's failure to appear at a committee hearing is deemed to demonstrate that the measure was designed to prevent campus disorder.

Media Minor: Possible Jobs

by Martha Saltzman

Possible jobs of a second (or third) major can be found by looking at the options that were discussed Tuesday by the University Committee on Curriculum and Curriculum.

A panel of rotating members from the facilities and the administrative council was engaged by the committee in a series of discussions designed to focus on the role of the various departments and the relationship of the various departments to the curriculum.

The panel's central task was to find the most appropriate way to weld the various departments into a cohesive whole.

The panel's first meeting of this academic year, on October 5, was devoted to the topic of "The University and Higher Education." Dr. John Watson, chairman of the panel, and Dr. Robert MacDonald, director of the School of Library Science, described the panel's work and the process of campus planning.

The panel's second meeting, on October 17, was devoted to the topic of "The University and Higher Education." Dr. John Watson, chairman of the panel, and Dr. Robert MacDonald, director of the School of Library Science, described the panel's work and the process of campus planning.

The panel's third meeting, on October 24, was devoted to the topic of "The University and Higher Education." Dr. John Watson, chairman of the panel, and Dr. Robert MacDonald, director of the School of Library Science, described the panel's work and the process of campus planning.

The panel's fourth meeting, on October 31, was devoted to the topic of "The University and Higher Education." Dr. John Watson, chairman of the panel, and Dr. Robert MacDonald, director of the School of Library Science, described the panel's work and the process of campus planning.

The panel's fifth meeting, on November 7, was devoted to the topic of "The University and Higher Education." Dr. John Watson, chairman of the panel, and Dr. Robert MacDonald, director of the School of Library Science, described the panel's work and the process of campus planning.

The Faculty-Student Association is in trouble. For the first time in five years, the FSA will not be in the black at the end of the semester. Other Faculty-Student Associations are having similar difficulties, even though the unions have been rather stable recently.

The FSA budget summary shows where the money is. In fact, its balance sheet shows how the money is being spent. The FSA has planned to spend, and was spending, the money in a way that would result, excluding $30,000 the Bookstore was supposed to return. This spending, traditionally, goes to several programs which we will look at in the future. Right now, one concern is a proposed $300,000 loan from the FSA and the more critical case for that loan, the Bookstore.

The Bookstore was expected to spend $300,000, but the $300,000 the FSA has planned to spend, and was spending, the money in a way that would result, excluding $30,000 the Bookstore was supposed to return. Salt Of The Earth Presents Social-Economic Struggles Of Miners

The film, now playing at the State Quad, presents the struggle of Mexican miners for higher wages and better working conditions. The dynamics of the situation were summed up by Vincente Minnelli, director of the film, who said, "The miners are fighting for their lives, and the film is about their fight." The film is a powerful testament to the牺牲 and dedication of the miners.

Beethoven Series Ends

A concert called "The Beethoven Series" has come to an end. The series featured a variety of Beethoven's works, including symphonies, string quartets, and piano concertos. The series concluded with a performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

ECONOMIC STRUGGLES OF MINERS

Among the many victims of the "red scare" was a group of Mexican miners who had been working in the industry for many years. After joining the protests for higher wages and better working conditions, the miners were arrested and forced to leave their homes. The film documents their struggle and the consequences of their activism.

The film was directed by DANSK Productions and is scheduled for release in March. The producers have promised that the film will be a powerful and thought-provoking exploration of the social issues and political struggles of the time. The film is being distributed by the>
Because of the increasing concern with the nature and quality of instruction and curriculum at the State University of New York at Albany, it is proposed that an organization be established for the expressed purposes of evaluating courses and teachers. This undertaking should be a joint student faculty administration project.

A subcommittee, chosen for this purpose, has developed a general evaluation questionnaire instrument to survey the opinions and attitudes of students completing specific sections of a course.

BACKGROUND
New Patterns of Undergraduate Education and the various Task Force reports have all dealt with the need for such an extensive evaluation, the Task Force on Academic Priorities specifying (Dec. 18):

"Professors are urged to develop and use new or additional methods of evaluating their own teaching in order to improve the effectiveness of their courses. Samples of questionnaires, rating scales, and similar devices, as well as advice from experienced personnel, should be made available through the Project for the Improvement of College Teaching and eventually through the University Office of Evaluation." The importance of such an evaluation was also stressed by numerous reports and papers arising from the "Dialogue" sessions and eventually through the personnel, should be made available through the University Office of Evaluation.

The primary purpose of the results obtained would be to provide feedback to the administration on the effectiveness of the courses and the methods of evaluating their own teaching in order to improve the effectiveness of the courses. Samples of questionnaires, rating scales, and similar devices, as well as advice from experienced personnel, should be made available through the Project for the Improvement of College Teaching and eventually through the University Office of Evaluation.

Archeologists Studying Ft. Orange

by Mike Ellis

The bastion that the French built to the north in 1688 had a strategic value. Its height and the distance of its guns made it an effective stronghold. The fort had a similar function to other forts in the area, such as Fort Leonardo, which was built on the west side of the Hudson River. Fort Orange was roughly 110x120 feet, according to a 1766 survey. It was a square building, with a high central tower. The fort was built on a hill, which provided a natural defense against attackers from the river. The walls of the fort were about 10 feet (3 meters) thick, and the inner courtyard was large enough to accommodate 500 men. The fort had a garrison that was composed of French soldiers and Indian allies.

The excavation in the Northeast is presently sponsored by the New York State 'Historic Trust (Division of Parks and Recreation) is presently sponsoring a dig of the historic ruins before March 1st any way. (They have a program on Saturdays to show you the results.)

In 1624, eighteen Walloon families, from what is now South Belgium, established a colony for the Dutch East India Company, and built Fort Orange. While much work is done on pre-historic sites (an erroneous term used to describe pre-Biblical settlement America), the dig in Albany has the added interest of a townsite picture of the Dutchmen's town. The area where the fort stood is now Broadway. With its position on the Hudson River, it was an important trading center. The town grew around the fort and became a center for trade and commerce. It was also a center for education, with the establishment of a school in 1723.

Van Doesburgh's house is to his right. His home was an earthen-floored, narrow-windowed townhouse, typical of the period. It was surrounded by a wooden fence, and had a small garden in front. The house was built around 1675. A higher elevation fortress, Fort Frederick, was built on the north face. These ruins are presently not worked on as the alluvial level (the river's bed) has been reached.

The work is complicated by several factors. Beyond the tight budget, a small crew, and weather, the excavation needs cooperating permits and protection from the rain. The crew has been working on the site for the past week. They have uncovered a variety of artifacts, including pottery, bones, and tools. The artifacts are currently not being worked on as the alluvial level has been reached.

The excavation is expected to last several months, depending on weather and funding. The site is currently open to the public, and visitors are encouraged to come and see the progress. The excavation is being led by Mike Ellis, a local archeologist. He is working with a team of volunteers, who are helping to uncover the site. The excavation is funded by the New York State 'Historic Trust (Division of Parks and Recreation).
