Theme Changes

The proposed changes in the tradition and inter-class rivalries which will be voted upon tonight in the assembly are meant to preserve as much of the present tradition as possible. Discussions of the plan in the class of 1933 and the Administration show that it is going to be a compromise plan, and that the changes will be minor. There is little hope that the changes will be completely satisfactory to everyone in the class, but it is hoped that they will be acceptable to a majority. The plan is based on the idea that the tradition should not be so rigidly followed as to prevent any necessary changes. The changes will be made to make the tradition more adaptable to the present situation.

The changes that are being considered include the abolition of the tradition of having a single class as the only one to compete in certain events. This will allow for more equity and fairness in the tradition. The tradition of having the freshman class as the only one to compete in certain events will be abolished. This will allow for more participation from all classes.

The changes will also include the introduction of new traditions that are more adaptable to the present situation. The tradition of having the freshman class as the only one to compete in certain events will be abolished. This will allow for more participation from all classes.
