Union and State Battle Heatedly In Debate On Liberal Education

In the American or English concept of a college, the student enjoys a certain amount of freedom in his work. The original foundation was that the student had the right to attend any lecture which he desired and to secure a certification from the professor. This was at a time when the student was considered to be a free agent and was expected to make his own decisions.

In the modern college, this concept has been modified. The student is still free to attend any lecture he desires, but he is also expected to attend a certain number of lectures which are considered to be essential to his education. This is done in order to ensure that the student is receiving a well-rounded education and that he is not neglecting any important subject.

The student is also expected to take a certain number of courses which are determined by the college. This is done in order to ensure that the student is receiving a well-rounded education and that he is not neglecting any important subject.

This concept of education is not agreed upon by all. Some believe that the student should be free to make his own decisions and that he should be given the opportunity to choose his courses. Others believe that a certain amount of control is necessary in order to ensure that the student is receiving a well-rounded education.

If, sometimes, it is not so easy to believe in that dream of the young man, to believe in the "ideal," to believe in the hope that is the essence of life, then it is perhaps because we are not willing to accept the fact that we are living in the world of illusion, the world of the dream.
