WORKMEN PLACING SEATS IN NEW HALL

Cracks In Concrete Flooring Will Not Delay Plans

In spite of early fears that the concrete floor of the Under Hall would not be strong enough to allow definite plans for construction to go forward, work is now progressing rapidly. The floor had to be removed over several long cracks, and at that time a quarter-inch coating was applied. Cracks have not appeared, and it is expected that the work of installing seats will begin soon.

LIMIT MAY BE SET ON OFFICE SEEKING

Restriction Of Office Seekers Will Be Recommendation

Myaskanis will recommend in a joint assembly today that the student association take action to restrict the number of offices for which a student may be a candidate in any one organization.

It will be the first time that the faculty or the student association will act to limit the number of offices for which a student may be a candidate in any one organization.

The recommendation, if adopted by the student association, will provide that a student's being a candidate for two or more organizations will count only once toward the number of offices for which he wishes to be elected. This is expected to prevent the taking of the field for the other candidates, and to limit the number of elections which are necessary.

The recommendation will be read by a member of Myaskanis.

KIDNAPPINGS AND DUCKINGS FILL TWO DAYS AFTER "MOVING UP"

Territorial Removal Of Coats Is Followed By Struggle On Campus; Collins And Appleton Are Injured In Freesome Fight; Myakka Umbrella Collapse Of Polo Rush

A night of excitement and a day of action were the customary activities of the polo rush. For the first time in the history of the college, the freshmen took on the sophomores in a free-for-all battle.

Wednesday night, seven freshmen hired a taxi and went out to kidnap the two sophomores. They were unsuccessful, however, and the sophomores returned to their dormitories unharmed. The next day, the freshmen decided to take matters into their own hands and planned to kidnap the sophomores once again.

The next morning, the freshmen gathered in front of the two sophomores' dormitories and began to chant, "We want a ride!" The sophomores, who were already suspicious, became even more so when they saw the freshmen crowding around their dormitory doors. They attempted to escape, but were quickly surrounded. The freshmen then began to drag the sophomores down to the cellar of the college, where they were left to the mercy of the dark, damp environment.

One of the sophomores tried to resist, but was quickly subdued by the force of the freshmen. The other sophomore, who was more physically fit, fought valiantly, but was eventually overpowered by the sheer numbers of his attackers. The freshmen then began to search the two sophomores' belongings for anything of value.

After a brief search, the freshmen found a wallet containing several hundred dollars and a valuable pocketknife. They jealously guarded the possessions, knowing that the sophomores would be enraged when they discovered the theft.

The freshmen then decided to return to the cellar to continue their search. As they entered, they were met with a surprise. The sophomores had managed to escape and were now standing in front of them, brandishing cudgels and ready to fight.

The freshmen were taken aback by the unexpected attack. They quickly retreated, leaving the sophomores to deal with the remnants of the crowd. The sophomores then proceeded to search the cellar for any evidence of the freshmen's presence.

They found a few stray cigarettes and a discarded newspaper, which they took as proof of the freshmen's guilt. The sophomores then decided to return to their dormitories, where they would watch over their possessions until the freshmen were safely removed from the college grounds.

The freshmen, realizing that they had been outwitted, decided to return to their dormitories as well. They were relieved to find that their possessions were still intact and they felt embarrassed by their failed attempt at kidnapping.

The following day, the freshmen called for a meeting of all the sophomores to discuss the incident. The sophomores were eager to hear their side of the story and to defend their honor. They immediately assembled, prepared to confront the freshmen.

When the freshmen arrived, they were met with a barrage of questions and accusations. The sophomores demanded to know why the freshmen had attempted to kidnap them and what they hoped to gain from such an action.

The freshmen were unable to answer satisfactorily and were forced to admit their guilt. They then offered to return the stolen possessions and to apologize for their actions.

The sophomores accepted the apology and the freshmen were allowed to return to their dormitories. The sophomores then decided to take matters further and to make sure that the freshmen did not attempt to kidnap them again.

The sophomores' action served as a warning to the freshmen and they were deterred from any further attempts at kidnapping. The incident served to strengthen the bond between the two classes and to establish a lasting tradition of mutual respect and fair play.

No Differences Between Students Of Professional Schools And Liberal Arts Colleges, Tests Reveal

"Many of the differences in attitude thought to exist between students in liberal arts colleges and those in professional colleges have been found to be nonexistent," Dr. Frederick H. Morris, assistant professor of education, said today. "A recent investigation of the opinions held by students of the three types in St. Lawrence College, Hamilton, Ont.; the University of Wisconsin, Madison; and St. John's, New Brunswick, found that students of the three groups in the three types of colleges had the same opinions. The only difference found was that the students in the professional colleges had a tendency to be more practical in their outlook."
