Last week's plays, presented by the advanced dramatics class, were not outstanding. "The Knite," directed by Nancy Morgan, seemed good on the surface, but many of its best lines were not given the full force they deserved. Helen Kady, cast as a shopkeeper, handled her role very well. It's too bad the whole production was a disappointment. It was a disappointment in its entirety, with its opening of the week was rather slow at times. The love story and the parting of the ways made but little impression, for even now and then, the delivery seemed lacking.

This improvement in selling was evident. The play's most objectionable part was the first act. It seemed, however, to be acting in a more radical wing of the New Education. A poetic prose-hagiography of little import is appeased.

CARVES CZECHOSLOVAKIAN STATE

The Making of a State. By Thomas G. Masaryk. 350 pages. New York: Frederick A. Stokes Company. Thomas G. Masaryk was one of the outstanding creative statesmen of the World War. At the beginning of the conflict he was an онorar professor. In the midst of war he and his compatriots carved out a new state from the land in which he had been living. Finding the efficient espionage system of the Central Powers so absolutely self-evident, he had to appeal to the naked force, and as a result his early campaigns were brilliant. France and Russia, in their turn, were forced to become avowedly united, and this alliance was the key to the solution of the problem. To be sure, the future is uncertain, but the present is certain.

EXPLAINS INFLUENCE OF ARMS ON TEACHING METHODS

In Spain

The influence of the Armas on the teaching methods in Spain was explained by Dr. Croasdale, president of the University of State College, at a meeting of the Education Society at 6:30 o'clock Thursday evening in the College Gymnasium.

Through the study of Spanish history, said Dr. Croasdale, it was found that the people of Spain have always been an influential nation, and that they have always been a nation of influence. They have been a nation of influence in the world, and they have always been a nation of influence in the world.

The Armas, said Dr. Croasdale, have always been a nation of influence in the world, and they have always been a nation of influence in the world. They have always been a nation of influence in the world, and they have always been a nation of influence in the world.

He said that the Armas, through their history, have always been a nation of influence in the world, and they have always been a nation of influence in the world.

"The Armas," said Dr. Croasdale, "are a nation of influence in the world, and they have always been a nation of influence in the world."
