Commission Investigates Prison
By Gwendolyn Cole

The state's largest prison, the Attica County Jail, has been the subject of extensive investigation by the state's Commission on Correctional Facilities and Services. The commission has been examining the conditions for the past year, and has reported that the jail
is overcrowded, understaffed, and underfinanced.

Inmates at Attica have complained about the quality of their food, the lack of medical care, and the lack of educational and recreational opportunities. The commission has also noted that the jail's security system is outdated and inadequate.

The commission has recommended that the state increase the funding for the Attica County Jail and improve the living conditions for inmates. The state has yet to respond to these recommendations.

Tourist Railroad to be Restored
By Gwendolyn Cole

The tourist railroad in the area has been discontinued for several years. However, the state has recently announced plans to restart the railroad and restore it to its former glory.

The railroad was a popular attraction in the area, and many tourists enjoyed riding the train through the scenic countryside. The state has invested millions of dollars in the restoration project, and the railroad is expected to be fully operational by next summer.

The railroad will offer scenic tours of the area, as well as special events such as wine-tasting and music festivals. The state hopes that this will attract more tourists to the area and boost the local economy.

The Line Between Satire and Sexism

by Richard Memmott

Seven years ago, I was a junior at the homecoming of the University of Alabama. That was in 1977, and I’m sure you can guess what they were doing. It was the grandest event of the year, and it was always a big deal. But one thing that I remember distinctly about that homecoming was the way that some of the women were treated.

It wasn’t just that they were treated differently than the men, it was that they were treated differently than everyone else. The women were seen as objects to be looked at, not as people to be listened to. They were expected to behave in certain ways, to dress in certain ways, and to interact with the men in certain ways. It was all part of the culture of the time.

This culture persisted for many years after that, and it wasn’t until more recent times that things started to change. As women have gained more power and influence, they have been able to push back against this kind of treatment. But it’s a slow process, and there’s still a long way to go.

The Line Between Satire and Sexism has been a topic that has been discussed in many places. In the pages of the University of Alabama’s student newspaper, the Crimson White, there was an article that talked about this issue. It was written by a student named Sarah Johnson, and it was published in the fall of 2021.

Sarah’s article was a thoughtful piece that discussed the problem of sexism in the university’s culture. She wrote about the ways that women were treated, and she talked about the ways that this treatment was harmful.

Sarah’s article was a call to action, and it was a reminder that we still have a long way to go. We need to continue to work to change the culture, and we need to do it in a way that is respectful and inclusive. It’s important that we continue to have these conversations, and that we continue to work towards a more equal and just society.

SUNYA Officials Discontinue CDTA Negotiations

By Bill Hailer

Negotiations between SUNYA and CDTA over the possibility of closing the SUNYA campus in Schenectady, according to SUNYA Vice President of Business Affairs and Finance, Joanne Flaherty, have ended.

In a letter to CDTA's negotiating team, Flaherty reported that discussions over SUNYA's potential closure had been ongoing for several months. SUNYA and CDTA held several meetings to discuss the potential impact of such a move on both institutions and their communities. However, Flaherty noted that the negotiations had come to a standstill due to differences between the two parties.

According to Flaherty, SUNYA's financial situation has improved over the past year, and the university is now in a position to invest in its future. She added that SUNYA is committed to remaining an integral part of the local community and is working to enhance its programs and services.

CDTA officials confirmed the end of negotiations, stating that they were disappointed with the lack of progress made during the discussions. They noted that SUNYA had expressed its commitment to staying in Schenectady, but the university had not provided concrete plans or solutions for addressing the financial challenges it faces.

In response, Flaherty said that SUNYA remains committed to working with its partners to ensure the continued success of the campus. She added that the university would continue to explore ways to improve its financial situation and strengthen its programs to meet the needs of its students and the community.

What's Ahead for SUNYA?

While the closure negotiations have ended, SUNYA remains active in the community and continues to work towards its mission of providing quality education and services to its students. The university will continue to focus on improving its programs and resources to meet the needs of its diverse student body.

SUNYA will continue to explore partnerships and collaborations with other institutions to enhance its offerings and remain competitive in the academic landscape. The university is committed to providing a supportive and inclusive environment for all students, and it will continue to recruit and retain talented faculty and staff to ensure the quality of its education programs.

In conclusion, SUNYA's decision to discontinue negotiations over closure does not signify the end of its commitment to the community it serves. The university will continue to work towards its goals and priorities, ensuring that it remains a vital and valuable resource for the Schenectady region and beyond.

Student Health Fee Cut from SUNY Budget

The SUNY Board of Trustees voted Wednesday to eliminate the supplemental SUNY Health Program and reduce the $12 million currently paid by students to the program.

The budget recommendation was made by the Department of Health, which cited the need to prioritize funding for essential services and support the health needs of students. SUNY officials agreed and voted to approve the budget changes.

The SUNY Health Program has provided health insurance coverage to students since 1978. Over the years, the program has faced financial challenges, leading to increased costs for students. The decision to cut the program allows SUNY to redirect funds to other essential programs and services.

The funding cut will affect all SUNY campuses, but the impact will vary depending on local health care providers and insurance options. SUNY officials are working with students and health care providers to ensure a smooth transition and minimize any disruptions to student health care needs.
