Student Power?

"Student power" has recently begun to be used in as many different ways as people have been trying to use it. Professor Harry C. Lills in his recent book "The University at a Crossroads" states that this is a "manifestation ... of the students' increased sense of insecurity and frustration ..."

The student movement is not necessarily a "movement" but rather an "opposition". The opposition is not toward the university but rather toward the "system" which the university represents. Any "movement" is a means to an end, and the end is the right of the student to choose what university he wished to attend. The present form of the university is not functioning as it should function and the students are exercising their right to oppose it.

The above quote appeared in the December issue of a fairly obscure technical magazine. The editor of the magazine states that he does not necessarily reflect its views.

To the Editor:

The editors of the magazine of which you are the editor have been forced to make a decision. If you chose to support the administration's position in the above issue, you are supporting the viewpoint of the administration. If you chose to write your own viewpoint, you are supporting your own viewpoint. The editors of the magazine have made the decision to allow you to express your viewpoint. They have chosen to be open, honest, and fair in their editorial decision-making process.

The editors of the magazine have nothing against the administration, except that the administration has made decisions that the editors believe are unjustifiable. They have chosen to express their viewpoint in order to exercise their right to freedom of speech.

The editors of the magazine have chosen to support the student viewpoint in order to promote a better understanding of the facts surrounding the issue. They have chosen to support the viewpoint of the student because they believe it is more accurate and representative of the true situation.
