Police Search For Slocum; Traffic Violation Is Reason

The figures of two stalwart policemen following Clarence J. Dego, secretary-treasurer of the College, down the hall Monday afternoon caused almost inevitable speculation as to the culprit they were seeking might be. On being questioned, Mr. Dego admitted that Clyde Slocum, 26, was the object of their search. When the search was concluded, Slocum was in the hands of the police.

"Is that your car parked out there in forbidden space?" asked one representative of the law. On being told that it was, Slocum was given his freedom on condition that he remove the car to a site consistent with traffic regulations.

THE SUMMER NEWS

Published weekly during the summer sessions by the Students of New York State College for Teachers.

WHO IS RESPONSIBLE?
The organization of a summer baseball team at the college is progressing very slowly. Many students have evinced their desire to play on such a team but have failed to get together to formulate plans and a schedule for the team. It is therefore desirable that the prospective players should state their willingness to participate in such an athletic undertaking and get together and arrange a definite program to follow in order to encourage as many of the students as possible to take part in the activities.

MEETING A NEED
An attempt to meet the need for closer social relationships between summer session students who are graduates of the same college or normal school has been initiated under the direction of Miss Anna Carpenter. Under Miss Carpenter’s plan for several extra-curricular activities to break up the monotony of merely attending classes. The organization is made up of small groups of students who have become interested in extramural activities. They are meeting several times a week to discuss plans for conducting various activities. The first activity to be scheduled is a baseball game, and other activities will follow. It is hoped that these activities will prove useful and will perform a service much needed by the student body.

Editor, The News:

It does not take a very astute observer to see that nearly all of the students’ activities of the session are promoted by a small group of interested participants. This is an efficient method against the teachers who are here. They will say that they are here for the purpose of observing the college and that they should be able to forget, for six weeks, anyway, that they are educators. We hope they will be. We hope they will be. We hope they will be. We hope they will be.

Simon Maslan Reviews Art Of Kissing:
Tells of French And Russian Customs

By Si Maslan

We have at our house a number of letters containing the same old question: "What can be done to stop the ever increasing practice of kissing?"

This is the most difficult question we have ever been asked to answer. We believe that there is no remedy for that whatever. One person writes that "all people who indulge in kissing are uninviting barbarians." It may be that a kiss is the most wasteful token of affection, that it appears idiotic when practiced in public; we might have suggested to this young lady, that she take a trip to South America and take up residence in the habitations of that tribe of Indians there among kissing is unknown.

There are many different kinds of kisses, with many different meanings and significations. Let us define some of the antecedents of kissing and place them under correct classification. All over the world a kiss is regarded as the seal of faith, loyalty, reverence, and love. It is required by law, court, and religion.

In Russia, for ages, the kissing of the hand had been a sign of reverence and respect. It seems to be a sign of respectable looking gentleman.

"What can be done to stop the ever increasing practice of kissing?"

Si Maslan replies: "Yes, I am in favor of a student association. It would act as an integrative influence and would promote interest in extra-class activities."

News Editor Discusses Importance Of State's Extra-Curricular Activities

By Avenue A. Harris, Editor, Summer News

(Note. The following article is written with the view of explaining to both gradu­ate students and visitors at the summer session the growth of interest by students in the extra-curricular activity supported by the College.)

It is but natural to assume that in a student association numbering more than 1,200 that many different interests will be found. It may be justly said that the field of extra-curricular activity at the regular session is so wide and varied as to give to every student the opportunity to benefit to the fullest extent from participation in them. Perhaps the most important activity supported by the students is journalism. There are four publications, the State College News, the Pedagogue, the Echo, and the Lion, give to the students of journalism. There are four publications. The State College News, the Pedagogue, the Echo, and the Lion, give to the students of journalism. Each year numerous pro­ductions are given by the associa­tion. On several occasions plays and women's teams completed their schedules without a single defeat. The first debate planned by the debate council for the coming season will be one with a team representing four Scotch universities in the fall. It will be the second inter­national debate in which the College has participated. The work of the dramatic and art association has done much to place State college on the map of art. Each year numerous produc­tions are given by the associa­tion. On several occasions plays of first rank are presented. In addition, the association is instrument­al in bringing for per­formances here men of outstanding rank in the department of drama­tics.

In like fashion the music council brings to the College each year out­standing artists for the students to hear. During the past year the per­formances of the Russian quartet and Percy Grainger linger in the memories of the students who heard them.
