Acid Gives Life!

British workers have been able to keep a green plant alive by feeding it only one kind of nutrient—potassium! The plant gets no water, no carbon dioxide, no nitrogen. It's growing, they say, only because of the potassium. The potassium is eaten up by bacteria which digest the potassium from the medium in which it is placed.

Hunt Mice Which Host Fleas

Donald Putlitz is attempting to find a new and better flea host for the Oregon state. He has already found the best flea host to be the gray squirrel, but he's still looking for a better one. The gray squirrel, it turns out, is not only a good host for fleas, but it also has a high population density. Putlitz is using a technique called "map game" to find the best host for fleas.
