SA backs down on Hamilton ouster

"W" policy, ASP comments had prompted calls for resignation

By Tom Barry

Student Association has backed off its plans to ban the use of “W” policy, according to student leaders, but a number of students have called for the change in policy. Acting President Judith Ramaley also suggested that there be an opportunity to evaluate actual language skills of all potential Teaching Assistants and make some decisions when the opportunity arises.

Milgrim however, denied the allegations. "I've been in close contact with Hamilton for the last several weeks," he said. "We're working very closely with Hamilton in the future. We're trying to work more closely with Hamilton and in the future."

Committee to explore "W" policy alternatives

By Ian Clements

Two student-initiated alternatives to SUNYA's new "W" policy, known as the "W," which is to take effect starting in the fall semester of 1985 have been proposed to University Senate's Committee on Student Affairs, according to the committee chair.

The committee is currently working on the issue of foreign instructors who register for a one-week period. Both provisions will help students to register for courses in a more efficient manner.

Farrell is head of the SUNYA program which evaluates the English language ability of foreign instructors who register for a one-week period. Farrell is still working on the issue of foreign instructors who register for a one-week period.

Active campus union movement creates positive GSEU attitude

By John Crawford

The SUNYA Graduate Student Employees Union (GSEU) found itself a cornerstone for unionism on SUNYA’s campus Monday when its newly elected president, Dennis Stevens, announced that the Graduate Student Union has now been formed.

By Thursday students on campus were walking around with an air of anticipation, aware of the new unionism on campus.

"I have become excited about the union here," said Thomas Latta, a medicine major and SUNYA GSEU member. "I've been involved in various other unions on campus and the students here are very enthusiastic about unionism."

According to Robert S. Krikker, former SUNYA assistant director of student personnel, students here are more union-minded than students at SUNY Albany because of the 'worker union' movement that has become popular in corporate America.

"I have become excited about the union here," said Thomas Latta, a medicine major and SUNYA GSEU member. "I've been involved in various other unions on campus and the students here are very enthusiastic about unionism."

Krikker added that the new unionism on campus is due to the support of感动es and campus organizations that have traditionally supported the union movement.

Jorma Kaukonen's Blue Tunes

As a boy growing up in Finland, Jorma Kaukonen was exposed to a rich tapestry of musical styles. His father, a professional musician, introduced him to classical music, and his mother encouraged his interest in folk music. Kaukonen's early musical education laid the foundation for his later career as a renowned musician and composer.

Kaukonen's musical journey began in the early 1960s when he moved to the United States. He quickly became involved with the folk music scene in New York City, where he met fellow musicians such as Mike Bloomfield and Levon Helm. Together, they formed the band Great Society, which released a number of albums in the late 1960s.

In the late 1960s and early 1970s, Kaukonen's career took off with the formation of Hot Tuna, a band that combined elements of blues, rock, and folk music. The band's sound was influenced by Kaukonen's love for traditional blues and folk music, as well as his ability to incorporate contemporary musical techniques.

Kaukonen's musical career continued to evolve throughout the decades, with numerous awards and recognition for his contributions to the world of music. He has been inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame and has received several Grammy Awards for his work with Hot Tuna.

Despite his success, Kaukonen remains committed to the craft of music, and he continues to perform and record as a solo artist. His music continues to be celebrated for its innovation and its ability to bridge cultural differences and connect people through the universal language of music.
EDITORIAL
Sweet success, sour suspicions
A new treatment for breast cancer patients is on its way. Last week in our own Lecture Halls, SUNYA awarded the coveted medical award in the field of Cancer Research to a new drug, Tamoxifen. However, despite the news of this breakthrough in medical science, there is still much controversy surrounding the drug.

In other words, there are some serious problems that must be dealt with before we can happily accept the apparent benefits of this program.

In working with Kaypro, one of the major companies that is a financial backer of the SUNYA project, we have found that they are working against the success of this project. One of the major problems that we have observed is that Kaypro is not providing adequate funding for the project. This is a clear indication that Kaypro is not committed to the success of this project.

The committee is aware of the dangers of this drug, and has been working to ensure that the necessary precautions are taken. At the same time, we are concerned that the media has not given proper coverage to the potential benefits of this drug. We believe that more effort should be made to educate the public about the benefits of this drug, and the importance of its use.

Many thanks

To The Editor:

Many thanks to the author of "The silent majority" who pointed out the error in my article. It is true that we should not underestimate the importance of the silent majority. However, I believe that the author's statement that the silent majority is the key to understanding political behavior is overly simplistic.

In many cases, it is not the silent majority that holds the key to political behavior. It is often the minority groups that have the greatest impact on the political process. For example, the African American vote was crucial in the 2008 presidential election, even though they are not the largest minority group.

Ultimately, it is important to recognize that political behavior is complex and multifaceted. It is not enough to simply focus on the silent majority or the minority groups. We must take into account the role of other factors, such as economic conditions and social movements, in shaping political behavior.

Thank you for bringing this to my attention. I will make sure to correct the error in my article.

Sincerely,

Pro-choice response

To The Editor:

I would like to respond to the letter by [Author Name] in which they argue against the pro-choice position. Their argument is based on the false premise that abortion is a personal choice that should not be influenced by anyone else.

In reality, abortion is a complex issue with many factors that come into play. For many women, the decision to have an abortion is not a personal choice, but rather a necessity. For example, a woman may choose to have an abortion if she is not financially able to support another child, or if she is in a abusive relationship.

Furthermore, the idea that abortion is a personal choice ignores the impact that political and social forces have on women's lives. For example, the lack of access to abortion services in many parts of the country means that women are forced to make decisions about their bodies that they may not have made if they had access to resources.

In conclusion, abortion is not a personal choice, but rather a decision that is influenced by many factors. It is important to recognize the real reasons why women choose to have an abortion, and to support policies that provide women with the resources they need to make informed decisions about their bodies.

Sincerely,

Another article in the same book, "Diana Russell's "Pornography and Violence: What Now for New Yorkers?"" explores the same issue, but from a different perspective. The author argues that, while the anti-pornography movement is legitimate, it is important to also consider the impact that violence has on society.

In conclusion, the issue of pornography and violence is complex and multifaceted. It is important to have open and honest discussions about these issues, and to work towards solutions that address the root causes of violence and exploitation.

Money crisis halts presses for November Comity issue

By Alicia Clembo

Having failed to obtain a University grant, Comity, SUNYA’s International Affairs magazine did not publish in November for lack of funds. However, the magazine’s editor, Brian Jacobs, said a December issue would be published in addition to a winter University grant funding.

In the past Comity has been funded through advertising and subscriptions, but this year’s issue included a pre-press proposal which included an $800 grant. Jacobs explained that Comity didn’t ask for advertising because they thought the issue would be funded through research money, and that it was impossible, stating “I don’t mind the idea of a war. I don’t mind the idea of people being in a sensible way is what I am trying to spend money on defense, it is understandable that some people may be offended, but it shouldn’t be offensive.”

Black and White

“The vast majority of people are in favor of it,” said Abraham, “especially blacks. Blacks find it of no discrimination of characters.” He added, “I think it’s a silly proposal.”

Brown and Gold

“The last issue of the ASP will be Tuesday, Dec 11.”

The deadline for personals is Friday, Dec 7.

Unbeaten Danes win fourth over Stony Brook

Soaring was the most important factor in the Danes’ fourth win in a row over the Stony Brook Bears Wednesday afternoon at UAlbany’s Alumni Gym. After losing the first two games to the Bears, the Danes had just scored the win over the Bearcats. With 14 minutes left, the Patriots made a strong comeback in the Coast Guard Invitational. SUNY officials foresee 21; SA nabs over 1,000 anti-hike letters

While more than 1,000 students were writing letters in an attempt to convince the state’s legislators to maintain the same drinking age for the remainder of the year, the Danes placed second out of 16 teams.

The season started off with a return to the winner's circle. The Danes prepped to the first game with a loss. Adams, Unicamp, would be outsiders. Unicamp was playing with a deep bench in its match, which covered the conditions of women. Unicamp had improved for either of the last two games as far as the end of the match. Being the Danes a second place finish. Results on State Quad were especially positive, with Gladreaux, who would not lose for the remainder of the year. Kenney and Bob Zornholz had picked up the slack for the Danes. With 14 ticks left, the Danes made a strong comeback in the Coast Guard Invitational. The Danes placed second out of 16 teams.

College student growing target for advertisers

By Judy Tovar

The traditionally valuable college student has become an increasingly smaller target for advertisers. According to the Advertising Research Foundation, the average college student has a high school diploma, is between 18 and 24 years old, and has a bachelor’s degree.

“Students are intelligently protesting the 21-drinking age law with a strong case.”

The traditional college student is no longer the target for advertisers. College students have been increasingly targeted by the advertising industry, with the average college student being at least 18 years old and having a bachelor’s degree. According to the Advertising Research Foundation, the average college student has a high school diploma, is between 18 and 24 years old, and has a bachelor’s degree.

However, the trend of college students being targeted by advertisers has been declining in recent years. According to the National Association of College Advertisers, the percentage of college students being targeted by advertisements has decreased from 70% in 2010 to 45% in 2018. This decrease has been attributed to the increasing use of social media and the internet, which has made it more difficult for advertisers to reach college students.
