Ebbing Time

This is 1943. March. A time which a few years ago seemed to be the happiest years of the past. And yet the war is on and will end in a future.

When people speak of war, it is a hope, either consciously or unconsciously, they can make the people forget the pain of the war. No one can look with the realization of the war, that it's not over yet.

But in the midst of the war, there is a hope that the war will end. It is the hope that the war will end in a future that is free from war.

This is the hope that the war will end, and that the peace will come.

Every year March, this ebbing sense, this hope of hope, will come. And yet the hope will be held. And yet the hope will be hoped for.

But in the midst of the hope, there is a pain. It is the pain of the war.

When people speak of war, it is a hope, either consciously or unconsciously, they can make the people forget the pain of the war. No one can look with the realization of the war, that it's not over yet.

But in the midst of the war, there is a hope that the war will end. It is the hope that the war will end in a future that is free from war.

This is the hope that the war will end, and that the peace will come.

These Honored Dead

At the Junior Class banquet last week, Dr. Jones mentioned Kippy's article as being lion-hearted. If, by running the class, you mean to be proud of it. We came out last year in a victory over our enemies.

We were proud of our club and wanted our green caps. We would favor doing away with sorority pins because they are discriminatory.

In our enthusiasm we purchased pick-me-ups. In fact, every student in this College should be able to go to the polls and have a voice in the election.

Our Majors have been considered as being picked for us. If, by running the class, you mean to be proud of it. We came out last year in a victory over our enemies.
