Salaries and Striking

On November 7th, the eve of our national elections, there is a very good chance that in New York City, there will go on strike for higher pay. This particular group of teachers is demanding the same compensation as the New York City News Guild to which they belong. They want a salary increase which will bring their earnings up to a competitive level with other professionals, such as doctors, who are members of the News Guild.

The main goal of the teachers is to get a fair wage for their work, and they are willing to go on strike if their demands are not met. This action is not only about pay, but also about recognition of their professional status and the value of their work. They feel that they are being undervalued and that their contribution to society is not being adequately compensated.

In conclusion, the teachers are fighting for fair compensation and respect for their profession. Their strike is a call for justice and equality in the workplace, and it is a testament to the power of collective action in advocating for change.
Kuhn to Speak

As a human being, I have always been fascinated by the theories and ideas of artists and thinkers like Picasso, Kuhn, and others. I believe that art is not just a way to express oneself, but also a means to explore the human condition. Picasso's paintings are a perfect example of this. His use of color and form is truly remarkable, and his ability to convey emotion through his work is what makes him one of the greatest artists of all time. I am excited to hear what Kuhn has to say on this topic.
