Uniqueness . . .

It is the only college for teachers in the United States that gives students liberal arts education and prepares them for teaching in secondary schools. Our faculty is very excellent and outstanding, second to teaching at a university. There are many distinctions between us and all the other teachers' colleges and to present them are partly indicated by the difference in the two ideas.

If and when names are changed and the name of Mac University College of Education becomes uniform for all teachers' colleges in New York State, there is no difference. With a few tricks involved to the public, even in name, there will be no distinctions involved. We will have no opportunity to be at a university. There will be no distinctions attached to us. We will have an opportunity to do so. We will remain the same colleges with a new name, but that name will change everything in the eyes of the public.

We students don't want to have the name of our college changed. We are very proud of the fact that we are small, and we don't want to be chained with the others who have been proven, was not the case. I do not feel, for this college. They are not the others, but the others.

Broken Barriers . . .

Tuesday evening in the Brubacher Game Room a considerable number of the members of the faculty and student body gathered together to witness reports given by the two Falcons and three Heralds who were the delegates to the Buffalo recently. In addition to listening to and discussing the good and bad points of the school at Buffalo, the group entered into a discussion of Student-Faculty relations, a very timely topic.

There was much criticism and discussion on the part of both the faculty and students. The feelings of both were brought out into the open and aired freely. We could almost feel the barriers crumbling under the weight of the remarks. A good many constructive suggestions were made by members of both groups.

This is the first time that the students and faculty have discussed this problem on a level scale. It is the first step in furthering education relations - establishing and defining the problems clearly. We are sure that there will be other steps to be followed, after a successful beginning.
