PHYSIOLOGY STUDENTS ARRANGE EXPERIMENTS

To reduce the cost of this investment, the Physiology students have arranged to conduct some experiments in their own laboratory. This will enable them to save money, as well as to gain valuable experience in the field.

NEGLECTED OPPORTUNITY

Blissfully unaware of the opportunity to hear one of the country's great orators, twelve hundred students at the summer session continued about their daily hum-drum tasks while the first of a series of recitals was generously offered by Dr. Junius L. Meriam who attended the session. In behalf of the student body, the Summer News takes the opportunity to thank Dr. Meriam and to urge a greater attendance at next week's concert. While the attendance of 125 at the first concert was creditable, more persons should have taken advantage of such an opportunity.

Dr. James L. Meriam who attended the recital said that the students had selected Dr. Thompson and the singing of the organ gave the desired effect of producing a "real and exciting rhythm" upon the students who were not in the "mindlessness and the need of recreation." The "mood of the students showed its appreciation by a great ovation. This is the best kind of applause," says Dr. Meriam, but he continues, "I hope that a similar representation of both songs and recital will attend the next recital, generously contributed by Dr. Thompson.

Be wary, said瞥ing new but interes-

He spoke of the great interest in the area being carried on in a musical education to keep pace with modern human interests. The ignorant selection of material in modern high-frequency work is something that Barnhardt said "loses interest and interest in a few minutes." He recommended the use of good music in schools and colleges to give a sense of stimulation.
