Meeting in New York Explained By Dr. Herman Cooper

During the American Associations annual convention in New York, Dr. Herman Cooper, president of the State College, addressed the gathering. He explained that the purpose of the convention was to discuss the future of the association and to present plans for the coming year.

The association has been operating for the past 15 years, and during this time it has grown from a few members to a nationwide organization. The convention is held annually to provide an opportunity for the members to meet and exchange ideas on the association's work.

During the convention, Dr. Cooper presented plans for the coming year, which include the expansion of the association's activities and the development of new programs. The association is committed to continuing its work in promoting excellence in education, and the plans for the coming year reflect this commitment.

In addition to the president's address, there were several other presentations made during the convention. These included reports on the association's activities during the past year and plans for future programs. The convention concluded with a reception and a banquet.

Overall, the convention was a success, and Dr. Cooper expressed his gratitude to the members for their support and dedication to the association's work.

What Price An Idea...

In an interesting study which is being conducted by Dr. C. V. Coffin, the president of the American Art Association, the following conclusions have been reached regarding the price of an idea:

1. The idea is often sold for less than its worth.
2. The idea is sometimes bought for a price that is much higher than its true value.
3. The idea is sometimes sold without any compensation.
4. The idea is sometimes bought and then discarded or neglected.

The conclusion is that the price of an idea is not always a reliable indicator of its worth. It is important to be aware of the factors that can influence the price of an idea, such as the seller's motives, the potential for the idea to be used in the future, and the market conditions at the time of the sale.
