Row, Row, Row Your House

Once upon a time we heard the idea of a Grouch Row. There were some groups on campus who did not favor it because they felt that if they got into a situation where they would have to deal with it, then it would mean greater cost and inconvenience. On their side of the argument, the administration has largely failed to consider the problem. And so we ourselves have thought about the idea and supported it. We like the idea, but we are not sure if the campus needs a long-range plan such as this.

Two realities have hit the campus already. It is difficult to find houses that are close, suitable for group living and relatively inexpensive. A start on Grouch Row could have been made. It wasn't even considered.

There are at least two other sensational and two fractional that are looking for new homes. Are we going to ignore another opportunity? Let's see a little more action and less verbal support?

Dearie, Do You Remember?

An old student principle is that the only students who should be active in the determination of the content of their curriculum. But like many of the theories in this world, there is nothing that approximates it in reality.

A month or so ago, the administration released the new curriculum changes. They came as a great surprise to most. The changes were considered good ones, but that does not excuse the fact that there was no real attempt to sample student opinion on this matter.

It was brought up to Myasky and they gave a report on their findings on the proposed changes. It should be considered, however, that the members of Myasky are Seniors and that it has been almost four years since they have taken the courses they were asked to report on.

To be specific, the psychology department has changed considerably in the last three years in its membership and certainly in its membership. Row can group pass down an opinion on a course when they have not received a new curriculum?

Administration has often voiced the opinion that student should be concerned with academic problems and the broader questions of education. We wonder, however, on the periphery of these matters. We don't feel the faults lies with the students.

What Me Bound . . .

As many of you undoubtedly do not know, each January all our films are bound in a smart leather volume. This volume is cherished for its sentimental and artistic value. Every year.

Only yesterday morning, one of the NEWS' fans just forth the suggestion we had on this practice. He informed us of a new total of this year's membership. It is not possible for us to get this list. We do not know what we like about people—criticism gains solidity and charity. Any more?

The State College Revue, an annual co-ed variety show presented by the College Union Board, will feature a number of performances by student groups.

The Revue was opened by the Student Council, with speeches by the Student Body President and the Vice President. The speeches were followed by a presentation by the Student Body Vice President, who announced the slate of candidates for the upcoming elections.

The Revue continued with a variety of performances, including a dance routine by the State College Dancers, a comedy sketch by the State College Jokers, and a musical performance by the State College Singers.

The Revue concluded with a presentation by the State College Cheerleaders, who performed a routine featuring songs and dance numbers.

The State College Revue is a popular event and attracts a large audience. The performers work hard to put on a show that will entertain and amuse the audience.
