The book is written in vivid, forceful English. It will be widely read, for it is written with that kind of content that the Prussian-American will understand and enjoy.

—W. M. P.

Not in years have we read a more vividly interesting analysis of "Lyme and Lingo," the ailing public, than Dr. Joseph Collins brings to his task. This latter-day Dr. Lingo is a classic historian who has written a wonderful book, the kind of content that the Prussian-American will understand and enjoy.

Intercollegiate Competition Raging in Albany

Intercollegiate athletics for women, despite the rapid growth of intramural athletics, is by no means a closed question. It developed during the sessions of the national athletic conference for women at Cornell university recently.

Georgia Mae, '27; Esther Laut-ter, '28; and Virginia Potter, '28, represented the Girls' Athletic association at the conference.

The question of intercollegiate athletics for women has always been handled with dynamism and force and conflicting opinions on it are by far not only only by the students but also by college administrators, by the faculty, by the department of physical education, and by parents.

Reopen the Battle

Discussion of the men's split fostered former conferences into two camps, but finally the group agreed against intercollegiate competition because the stronger side linked their revolution against it. The battle was reopened at the Cornell conference when several colleges threatened to openly disobey the rule against competition with other colleges.

State College and Russell Sage colleges ended their girls' varsity games this year to retain membership in the national association.

Colleges in the west are said to be trying to keep the rule and still have their interscholastic sport.

A platform based on the ideal of sport for women's sake was adopted by the national conference. The platform sets forth eight points, but it does not constitute a rigid set of rules and member colleges of the association recognize the importance of interpretation in the application of the rules included.

The plains are:

To emphasize mass participation through annual programs;
To sports days, a form of intercollegiate competition which emphasizes individual achievements rather than large participation.

home run in seventh gives the Visitors a 3-2 victory

Captain, Allen, star

The men's baseball team lost, 3 to 2, to Jamaica Training school in its opening game of the season Saturday afternoon. Allen, pitching his first game for State, allowed the visitors only free hits in three innings, but a home run in the first of the seventh by Turner, with one on base, gave Jamaica its winning margin. Although State collected eight hits, attempts to steal bases proved costly.

State had its big inning in the fifth when it scored two runs. Taylor beat out an infield hit. Griffin was thrown out, but Gaff grounded out a single to center. Whelan doubled into right field, scoring Taylor and Gaff. Whelan was tagged out as he attempted to streak third. Allen beat the catcher's throw to first when the latter dropped the third strike. Kinch reached first on an error. At this stage of the game, with two on bases, two out and Nossek up, Allen went out on an attempted steal of third. The seventh, with State holding 2 to 1 lead, Turner pounded out the home run with Ammon on base. It was a terrific error, the ball landing in the outfield for a single.

Captain Kowalski made a spectacular barehanded catch of Spellman's hard drive in the seventh inning.

Taylor replaced Allen in the box in the seventh. Allen was going right field, at right-field park. Whelan pitched good ball for Jamaica and kept State's hits well scattered. Allen beat the catcher's throw to first when the latter dropped the third strike. Kinch reached first on an error. At this stage of the game, with two on bases, two out and Nossek up, Allen went out on an attempted steal of third.
