State Halts Psychology Research

By Anna Jackels and Mike Pfeiffer

The State Health Department has accused SUNYA’s Psychology Department of engaging in "unethical experiments with human subjects" and has ordered the institution to stop all research involving human subjects, according to the institution’s internal review board.

According to State Health Department Commissioner Rebecca Warden, the order was issued following an initial review of the psychology department’s research and institutional review board for the protection of human subjects.

Specific charges levied at the university include failure to obtain written informed consent from the participants, and failure to inform them of the risks of physical, psychological, or social injury. Warden further styed that the qualifications and competence of the researchers. Their failure to appear before an external scientific review panel, and the lack of informed consent or supervision.

The State Department of Mental Hygiene has concluded that the SUNYA Psychology Department has engaged in "unethical experiments with human subjects" and has ordered the institution to stop all research involving human subjects, according to the institution’s internal review board.

A letter from the Department of Mental Hygiene to SUNYA’s Chancellor John Kelly was issued, stating that the SUNYA Psychology Department has engaged in "unethical experiments with human subjects" and has ordered the institution to stop all research involving human subjects, according to the institution’s internal review board.

The SUNYA Psychology Department was originally involved in clinical trials for a variety of patients, in accordance with the regulations of the principle public health officials.

A spokesperson for SUNYA stated that the institution did not have the capacity to immediately respond to the letter, but added that the institution would be making a full and transparent review of the situation for the students and staff involved.

"We feel confident that the presentation of these findings will be timely and transparent," said Kelly. "We have taken appropriate steps to ensure the well-being and protection of our students and staff involved in this research, and we will continue to work closely with the appropriate authorities to ensure a full and transparent review of the situation."
The psychology researcher admitted that some of the studies were never even published. She explained: "The psychology community has been artificially inflating the number of studies to make it appear as if the field is doing well. This has led to a false sense of progress and success.

Furthermore, some of the studies were so poorly designed that they were never intended to be published in the first place. They were simply conducted as a way to get funding or to keep a job secure.

This practice has been ongoing for decades and has been enabled by the lack of transparency and accountability in the field. It is time for psychologists to stop doing harm and start doing right by the public and the field of psychology.

"The psychology community needs to take responsibility for this and work towards creating a culture of integrity and ethical research. Only then can we truly make progress and provide valuable insights to society.

"As researchers, we must prioritize the health and well-being of our participants and the public at large. We cannot continue to prioritize our own careers and the prestige of our institutions at the expense of the truth.

"I urge all my colleagues to join me in making a commitment to do better. Let's prioritize the integrity of our research and the well-being of all those involved. It's time for us to be accountable and ethical researchers."

Our Place In The Power Structure

In Brian Cook's "The Power Structure" in the "huddle room" you wrote this: "Two students are in a room, talking about the future of the university. One says, 'I want to be the President of the University.' The other says, 'I want to be the President of the Student body.' The first says, 'What's the difference?' The second says, 'One's a lot more fun.'"

What does this quote mean in the context of the class we're discussing? Does it suggest that leadership positions are more about personal satisfaction than actual power or responsibility?

The quote you mentioned is from an article titled "The Power Structure" by Brian Cook in the "huddle room." It highlights the different perspectives on leadership roles within the university community. The first student's desire to be the President of the University implies a focus on gaining power and influence over the entire institution, while the second student's desire to be the President of the Student body represents a more localized and personal impact on the students' lives. The second student finds the latter role more enjoyable because it involves direct interaction and control over a smaller group, which can be more rewarding and less stressful.

This quote is often used to illustrate the distinction between aspiring to leadership positions that come with significant responsibilities and authority, like being the President of the University, and those that offer more immediate and localized benefits, such as being the President of the Student body. It suggests that while the latter role might be more pleasurable in the short term, the former role requires more significant personal commitment and the ability to balance personal satisfaction with the needs and expectations of a larger audience. It also touches on the idea that leadership positions are not just about the power they confer but about the nature of the work and the personal fulfillment one gains from it.

From Saturday Night Live To Sunday Night at the Palace

BY MARIELLE P. FRIED

This past Sunday night, the lights went dark in the Albany Palace Theater as the previous scene—everyone emerging from the costumes hung on the coat rack—ended. As the lights dimmed, the audience was greeted by a large screen displaying the words "The Sound of Music." The audience, consisting of approximately 500 people, clapped as the lights went up again.

"The Sound of Music," directed by Steven Spielberg, is a musical adaptation of the classic film of the same name. The audience was delighted by the musical performances, particularly the lead roles played by Daniel Radcliffe and Emma Watson. The audience erupted in applause as the lights went up for the final time, signaling the end of the show.

During the performance, the audience was treated to a variety of songs, including "Do-Re-Mi," "Climb Every Mountain," and "My Favorite Things." The audience was also treated to a special performance by the Albany Symphony Orchestra, which played the underscore for the show.

After the performance, the audience was invited to take a photo with the cast outside the theater. Many people lined up to take pictures, including children who had been brought to the show by their parents.

The audience was unanimous in their praise for the performance, describing it as "magical" and "amazing." One person commented, "I've seen The Sound of Music on Broadway, but this was even better!" Another added, "The cast was incredible, and the music was just amazing. I can't wait to see it again!"

Overall, the performance was a huge success, with many people expressing their desire to see it again. The Albany Palace Theater is planning to bring more musicals to the area in the future, so keep an eye out for upcoming shows.

A new study reveals that women who participate in physical activity are less likely to develop heart disease. The study was conducted on a group of women aged 50 to 70, and the results showed a 30% reduction in the risk of heart disease among those who engaged in regular physical activity. The findings suggest that encouraging women to participate in regular physical activity could have significant benefits for their long-term health.
Danes Maul Brockport 40-14 For Second Win

By Eddie Lawsman
Playing in a 9th straight game, the Danes outrebounded Brockport State, 55-37, and defeated the Bears, 35-30. Behind Senior, the Bears are ranked 17th in the Nation. Brockport State scored 40-14 to win its second game in a row.

Brockport State's starting lineup was led by Senior, who had 10 points, and Junior, who had 19 points. Senior was named Player of the Game for his efforts.

Slam Dunk Terminates Chem Ph D
By Thomas Marcella
Chemistry Ph.D. program has been terminated by SUNYA, adding to the list of academicians who have been laid off.

The DuPont Foundation (a chemical company) has granted a special committee appointed by the Graduate Academic Council and concluded that the program would not be able to meet the standards properly supported by various institutions in the State.

The proposal was the result of a meeting in the State New York State Education Department after receiving a "provisional continuance" letter by the state three years ago.

In December, 1984, the initial letter from SUNYA's Academic Council was received by Dr. James H. LeRoi, Assistant Professor of Chemistry. The letter noted that the program did not meet the standards of the State New York State Education Department.

Scientists from the department had not been able to meet the standards of the State New York State Education Department.

The proposal was viewed as a "very strong program" and it just happened to be the last one to receive a SUNYA's Academic Council action. The proposal had been reviewed by the department in 1984 and had received a favorable review from the State New York State Education Department.

In SUNYA's Mission, Program, and Priorities for Actions on Policies, Chemistry is listed in one of the 14 programs that need careful scrutiny. The check we file, however, shows the chemistry Ph.D. program "in very good condition," said SUNYA's Academic Council. This means that the program is best left alone.
