The Pieces Had To Fit Together...And They Did

By Paul Sennett

Rick Eibert had the wrong idea.

It was a cold December day, and the Hornets were playing host to the state camp. The game was tied 1-1 at halftime, and Eibert was certain that his team would come away with a victory.

But the Hornets didn't have the strength to win, and the game ended in a 2-2 draw.

Still, Eibert was pleased with his team's effort.

Sports Analysis

"I never thought we could win the game,"

Eibert said. "But we played well, and that's all that matters."

But the Hornets didn't have the effort to win, and the game ended in a

2-2 draw. Still, Eibert was pleased with his team's effort.

SA Commission Ends Election Probe

Calls For Four Resignations

By Michael Bourne

The Special Presidential Commission, which was established in April after the investigation of the Electoral College voting scandal, has recommended that four members of the Student Association resign from their positions.

These would include Central Council member Ed Klein. Klein argued that the commission was acting without

Respect for the rights of the

Stoner students, and that the recommendation was made without due process.

But, it was said that the recommendation was made due to the lack of evidence to support any other action.

The ASP learned of the findings of the commission, and would "get the job done," said the President.

The investigation, however, continues. The commission has not released any further details.

About 98% of the voters for the

SA President, Nelson, were not satisfied with the commission's report.

They would like to be able toducible

Nelson, who is a junior in the College of Business Administration, said he was disappointed with the commission's recommendation.

"I don't think the commission was fair," Nelson said. "I think the

Problems With SA
Jeremy Celino
Student Union Chairman

Finally because we are so young, many things we do as students are still untried. This is the primary reason for the student government's situation. We have an experienced SA, but we lack the knowledge to run it properly. Hence, the government has to rely on the guidance of its advisors. The end result is inefficient and ineffective government.

So far this year, five people have been appointed to the SA board of directors. Two additional appointments on the SA board are expected in the near future. The primary reason for this is the lack of ideas and the failure of the government to consider any suggestions. The student government is not effective, because we have to rely on the advisors.

Sue Santos, who is on the SA board of directors, is an example of this. In her letter to the editor in last Friday's edition, the student government is not effective. Because of the basic lack of ideas, the student government should then be reorganized to improve our education. The primary role of the student government is to represent student power. Student governments are different from other organizations. It is a representation of the students, not the administration. It is a representation of the students, not the administration. It is a representation of the students, not the administration.

The SA student government is more interested in expressing the students' opinions than in dealing with the problems of the students. The student government is not interested in helping the students, but it is interested in helping itself.

The primary responsibility of the student government is to represent student power. Student governments should be more interested in helping the students than in expressing the students' opinions.

An education of these problems exists because of the basic lack of ideas. The primary role of the student government should be to improve our education. The primary responsibility of the student government is to represent student power.

For the Editor:

The student government is a representation of the students. It is a representation of the students. It is a representation of the students. It is a representation of the students. It is a representation of the students.

As the "Quad-Organizer" of Sharon, I would like to point out a few things. I find it interesting that the student government was greatly engaged in the activities that it held and the public with which it associated. I find it interesting that the student government was greatly engaged in the activities that it held and the public with which it associated. I find it interesting that the student government was greatly engaged in the activities that it held and the public with which it associated. Thoughts on Anna Christie's lack of personality development show the author's artistry, as does the character's self-awareness and her struggles with her own identity. She is a strong, independent woman who defies the expectations of her time. However, her inner conflicts and the way she deals with them make her a complex and compelling character. Anna's story is a testament to the power of love and the importance of self-discovery.

From the Writings, 4

The human race has grown up. So have God's explanations. Jesus said, "I have many things to say and many things to teach you, but you cannot bear them now, when you are patient, will understand them." But there are things the child will understand later with the help of the child. So God's explanations have grown up too, both in content and structure. The sayings of the Old Testament have grown up too, and in structure, the sayings of the New Testament have grown up too. And so the child will understand them too.
