Police nab Draper robbery suspect after chase

A 15-year-old male was arrested Friday in Draper Hall and charged with breaking into two dorm rooms and stealing a wallet and a radio from the downstairs rooms.

According to University Police Lieutenant David Prendergast, who helped make the arrest, the suspect had been seen three times during the week by students studying in the library from the University of Illinois, a second-floor room-

The suspect, who is 6'2" tall and weighs 226, was reported by Prendergast and UPD Officer Gary Blake in the basement of Draper Hall. Both officers, Prendergast said, noticed the man entering the basement area and returning several times.

"The man entered the area at about 10:30 p.m.," Prendergast said. "He returned to his room in another part of the building and returned to the basement area." The man was eventually caught by Prendergast and officers, Prendergast said, adding, "We have had a very good cooperation from the faculty, staff, and students, including this floor, who helped us out." Blackout apology

To the Editor

This letter addresses an unfortunate incident that occurred recently at SUNY Albany. As noted in the December 1980 Economic Review and Operations-Business outstanding of several students and our own operations—Blackout (in a sense) was a success. It is a fact that the blackout was the result of a power failure. Several hundred students were affected, and a number of them were quite angry. For example, one student came to me the next day and said, “I was walking to class and was hit by a power failure.”

The purpose of this letter is not to defend the blackout, but to explain the situation. The outage was caused by a problem with one of the power plants. The outage was not planned, and it was not intended to cause any harm. However, we did inform the public that the power would be out for several hours, and that we would be able to continue with our operations.

We are sorry for the inconvenience this caused, and we will do our best to prevent such an occurrence in the future. We appreciate your understanding.

Women PhDs trailing in number of degrees earned

TODAY'S STUDENTS ARE TRAILING Men in the number of doctoral degrees earned. A new report shows that in 1984-85, women earned only 15.5 percent of all PhDs awarded, compared to 64 percent for men. The report, "Gender Differences in the Ph.D. Program," was issued by the National Academy of Sciences.

The report, which is based on data from the American Council on Education's Office of Women in Higher Education, found that the percentage of women PhDs in the biological sciences is even lower than in the social sciences. In 1984-85, women earned only 14.3 percent of all PhDs awarded in the biological sciences, compared to 64 percent for men.

The report also found that women are more likely than men to be unemployed after graduation, and that they are less likely to receive tenure or to be promoted. In addition, women are more likely than men to be left out of discussions and decisions that affect their careers.

The report recommends that universities take steps to address these issues, such as offering mentoring programs, providing child care, and creating more flexible work schedules. It also suggests that universities offer more support to women PhDs, including financial assistance and mental health services.

The report concludes that women PhDs are "a critical resource for our future. They bring a unique perspective to our institutions and contribute to the diversity of our workforce."
Women PhDs training in number of degrees earned

College female students despite a decades-long numerical trend in the number of students earning PhDs, a new study showed. "The increase is not just a result of more female students, but also a higher proportion of the degrees awarded to women," said Judy Feldman, a sociology professor at SUNYA. "We see a 30 percent increase in the number of women earning PhDs in the biological sciences alone, which is a significant increase."

Researchers evaluated historical data from the National Center for Education Statistics, a federal agency that collects information on education in the United States. The data show that the percentage of women earning PhDs has increased significantly in the past decade. In 1980, only 29 percent of PhDs were awarded to women. By 1990, this number had risen to 43 percent. In 2000, the percentage had increased to 50 percent. In 2010, it stood at 55 percent.

The study also found that women are more likely than men to earn PhDs in certain fields, such as the biological sciences, psychology, and sociology. In 2010, women earned 58 percent of all PhDs in psychology, 63 percent in sociology, and 67 percent in the biological sciences.

"This is a significant trend," said Feldman. "It shows that women are increasingly entering the field of higher education and are doing well in it."

The study also found that women are more likely to earn PhDs in fields that offer higher salaries, such as law and business.

"It's not just a matter of numbers," said Feldman. "Women are doing well in these fields and are earning more money than men."

The study also found that women are more likely to earn PhDs in fields that offer better job opportunities, such as engineering and computer science.

"Women are doing well in these fields and are more likely to find good jobs," said Feldman. "It's not just a matter of numbers, but also of quality."

The beat goes on: Danes thrash Hunter, 87-54

By Keith Marchild
SPORTS EDITOR

The Albany State Great Danes upped their record to a perfect 7-0 as they handily defeated Hunter College of New York City, 87-54 at University Gym last night. Hunter put up some token resistance before the Danes blew the game wide open.

A John Moran baseline lay-up with 16:47 left to go in the game. Moran hit a lay-up and Gosule went down with an injured knee, a similar injury that he suffered in the middle of the season that caused him to miss a few games. On the bright side for the Danes, Uprising dressed for the first time since the second game of the year and was available for some emergency duty.

The Danes' defense got stingy late in the first half as they held the visitors to four points in the last 7:10 of the session. They didn't let up in the second half as Hunter could manage only 22 points after the break.

John Mrazek scored seven points in the first half. And with 5:29 left in play in the content the big lefty delighted the crowd with a sweeping hook which pushed the Danes advantage to 10, 73-43. Mrazek also made his presence felt inside as he hauled down eight rebounds.

Dane point guard Dan Croutier, who was honored before the game for being the first Dane to dish out 500 assists as well as being the 14th Albany basketball player to score 1,000 points picked up right where he left off Saturday night in Plattsburgh, where he set both marks. Croutier handed out eight assists last night and threw in eight points on 4-6 shooting.

All of Croutier's points came on long-range jumpers from 15 feet and out. On his assists Croutier mixed in a little of dazzle dazzle. Two of his assists came on touchdown strikes from Croutier to his backcourt-mate Mrazek. On them he looked more like Dan Marino, Croutier said.

The Danes continued their domination for the rest of the game as the final score was 87-54. The Danes' lead to three, 11-8. But then the Danes scored 17 out of the game's first 18 points in the next five minutes of the game to increase their advantage to 19 and seemed to secure Dick Sauers' 46th career victory.

"In the beginning I wasn't very happy with our play," said Sauers. "They were spreading us out and we couldn't play man-to-man against them. They were just beating us down.

"I think we wanted to get too many points too soon. And you can only get two at a time."

In the first half the Danes were led by the hot shooting of Dave Adam. The senior shooting guard hit seven out of his 10 first-half shots, which was good for 14 points. "I thought it was a good performance," said Sauers.

The Danes outscored the opposition 129-18 in a dazzling display of dominance. Coach Joe DeMeo's 5-0 wrestler: "Last year's loss down there (in Hunter) was a tough one for us. We were a little off last year. We had a lot of injuries and we lost our starting five."
