Students can now break contracts

Due to the current economic conditions, many students are finding it difficult to continue their studies. Some have had to cancel their academic programs due to financial constraints. However, a new policy has been implemented that allows students to break their contracts if they are unable to continue.

The new policy states that students who are unable to continue their studies due to financial reasons can request to break their contracts. The request will be evaluated based on financial need, academic performance, and other relevant factors. If the request is approved, the student will be able to withdraw from their program without penalty.

This policy is expected to help many students who are struggling financially. It will give them the opportunity to find alternative sources of funding or to take a break before returning to their studies.

The policy has been widely praised by students and educators alike. It is seen as a step towards making higher education more accessible to everyone.

Chapel House destruction is opposed by committee

The Interfaith Center of Albany is opposed to the destruction of Chapel House. The Center, located on the SUNY campus, is a religious community center that has been in operation for over 50 years.

A motion to change the plans for the Interfaith Center was made by a student group. The motion was supported by the SUNY Board of Trustees.

The Interfaith Center is concerned about the potential loss of a valuable community resource. The Center serves as a meeting place for students from a variety of religious traditions.

A protest will be held on May 10 at 4 p.m. to show opposition to the change in plans. The Committee to Save Chapel House is encouraging everyone to attend.

The Odyssey Of A Dow Demonstrator: 68-69

I know the way home with my eyes closed.

"I know the way home with my eyes closed." This is a quote from the beginning of what appears to be a story or essay about a personal experience. The author mentions that they know the way home with their eyes closed, perhaps indicating a sense of familiarity or comfort in their environment.

Another section of the text seems to discuss Dow Chemical demonstrations, mentioning the Dow Chemical Company and Dow Chemical recruiter, as well as incidents involving protests and demonstrations against Dow Chemical. The text includes various events and actions taken by the author and others, such as attending Dow interviews, participating in demonstrations, and attending a small number of lectures.

The text also includes a mention of the University of Albany, with a reference to the Cornell Cooperative Extension Service. There are references to a "student's placement" office and a "student dormitory" at Cornell University, as well as discussions about the university's policies and the author's experiences with them.

The text contains a variety of other topics, including a discussion about the importance of time management, the role of media in shaping public opinion, and the impact of personal beliefs on one's actions and decisions. There are also references to the University of Illinois, with a mention of a "student dormitory," and a discussion about the importance of keeping time.

Additionally, the text includes a mention of a "student's placement" office and a "student dormitory" at Cornell University, as well as discussions about the university's policies and the author's experiences with them.

The text is divided into several sections, with each section discussing a different topic. The sections are separated by blank lines, indicating a clear break between topics. The text is written in a narrative style, with the author providing personal anecdotes and insights into their experiences.

Overall, the text appears to be a personal reflection on the author's time at university, with a focus on their experiences with Dow Chemical demonstrations and their relationship to the university's policies and procedures.

ON CINEMA

It is a shame that more films like BATTLE OF THE SOMME, have not been made before. Using the methods of S.M.W. HINGE, THE METROPOLITAN OPERA has created a film which is an attempt to re-create the battle. The film is by no means a serious historical work, but it is a most interesting example of how a film company can make a film that will be enjoyed by the public.

One of the most interesting aspects of this film is the way in which the battle is presented. The film is not just a series of shots from the point of view of a single soldier, but it is a series of shots from the point of view of many soldiers. This is done by using a technique called "shoot-through," which allows the audience to see what is happening on both sides of the battlefield.

Another aspect of this film that is interesting is the way in which the soldiers are portrayed. They are not shown as stereotypes, but as real people with real emotions. This is done by using the techniques of "characterization," which allows the audience to see the individuality of each soldier.

One of the best sequences in the film is the one where the soldiers are marching to the sound of a bugle. This is done by using the technique of "sound recording," which allows the audience to hear the sound of the bugle.

The film ends with a sequence where the soldiers are dancing around a campfire. This is done by using the technique of "dancing," which allows the audience to see the joy and happiness of the soldiers.

Overall, this film is a great example of how a film can be made that is both entertaining and informative.

Social Knowledge

If the good of knowledge lies in its practical social applications why do we not receive academic recognition for using that knowledge? This University has never given credit for tutoring in the South End or Arbor Hill areas, for work in political campaigns, in student government, in the newspaper.

It has not recognized the educational function of any of these activities. As a matter of fact, the university's emphasis on "ideal" knowledge rather than practical or "realistic" knowledge has led many students away from these socially beneficial services. In order to achieve purely academic perfection they cannot spend time serving the community (Academic and outside).

This policy must change and can change by this fall. Faculty Senate must implement the task force report on instruction which calls for recognition of aforementioned services. By doing so it would be rewarding many for using their education and social motivation for the good of the community. It would also allow more of us to contribute in this way benefitting ourselves and this institution.

Department chairman can add to this prevailing inflexibility by adding new programs to their departments within which students can shape their own education. The departmental programs are only a start. More independent study courses for individual projects should be offered at the undergraduate level, preferably by the fall.

We see our professors can aid in this pursuit of knowledge by innovating within their department. Students, of course, now that they have had their influence formalized, may add immensurably new dimensions to their departments. They can and must demonstrate their ability to contribute to their own education.

We hope that the expectations for a more involved and flexible institution, next year are fulfilled so that we may be better educated for the future.

Another Dedication

Today, we formally dedicate this impressive, 104 million dollar campus. Construction has been completed on the entire body of the podium (for the while, anyway) and on the quadrangles (we'll forget about Indian Quag for now). Speeches are to be made, mention of the University calls for 125 years will be repeated redundantly, and fascinating and captivating predictions will be made for her next 125.

But, STOP. Right now, stop and think...and maybe, even, listen. Dedicated to what? For whom?

The dedication of a mass of concrete and glass is meaningless. Concrete, whether designed by Edward Durell Stone into a campus, or simply lying on the ground in the form of sidewalks, is nothingness. Concrete, whether designed by Edward Durell Stone into a campus, or simply lying on the ground in the form of sidewalks, is nothingness.

What students on this campus should get from this dedication, is, finally, a sense of dedication themselves. Is it possible that this might be offered on the undergraduate level, preferably by the fall.

We see the need for dedication on the part of students as pressing; a new administration will attempt to cope with the universe of problems that this campus contains.

We are not, of course, now that they have had their influence formalized, may add immensurably new dimensions to their departments. They can and must demonstrate their ability to contribute to their own education.

We hope that the expectations for a more involved and flexible institution, next year are fulfilled so that we may be better educated for the future.

News Board

The News Board of the Albany Student Press has elected a somewhat new slate of editors to forge into the Fall Semester with high hopes. Kathy Hauser, currently the Associate News Editor of the paper, has taken over the reins from Tim Keckley as News Editor. Her Associate Editor will be Anka Thayer, a sophomore from Hastings, New York.

Daryl Lynn Wagner and Dave Fish were appointed to the positions of Arts Editor and Sports Editor, respectively, for the Fall '69 campaign.

Phil Frechette has stepped down as Business Manager, but will continue as National Ad Manager. Chuck Rine will take his place as Business Manager.

Technically speaking, Pat O'Hern will continue to serve the paper in her capacity of Tech Editor. Bill Shapley, former Technical Co-Editor, has resigned.

Student News is a weekly publication of the Albany Student Press. This newspaper is funded by S.A.R. All material published in this publication is subject to editing.
