Ends in Heated Debate

Louis T. Benezet: The Man, The Issues

by J. Stephen Flavin

"What makes it all come out, Dr. Benezet? Do you have any more speeches planned?"

"No," Benezet replied. "Nothing against other colleges, but I'm just not in the market for another speech." He turned and walked back to the podium. "You can't make me do it. I'm not the type to run after speeches."

President of the State University of New York at Albany, Benezet was a man of few words. He preferred to let his actions speak for him.

Middle East Forum Ends in Heated Debate

Second attempt consisting of two subcommittees, one graduate student, one faculty member, was turned down by the administration. The administration, seeing no need for such a committee, turned it down.

The greatest portion of the present debate has hung over the question of funding. This continues to be a point of contention. Many students and faculty members are concerned about the amount of money going into the administration. They feel that the administration is not using the funds as they should be.

Bilateral Trade

Although the Middle East is in turmoil, there is no international pressure if not internal pressure to prevent war. There has been a tendency for the world that may have developed in the past. The United States has been brought into the debate, and the United Nations has been called in to help.

"We need to look at this situation from a different perspective. The United States is not the only one interested in the outcome of this conflict. We must consider the interests of all parties involved," said Benezet.

New Security Head Sought

President Louis T. Benezet announced Friday afternoon that the Central Security Committee, a group of faculty and staff, will seek a new director for the campus security force. The current director, Donald E. Glennon, was recently appointed to the position of Executive Vice President for SUNY.

"This is a great opportunity for someone to take over the reins of this important department," said Benezet. "I am confident that we will find a candidate who can bring a new perspective to the security force."

Report Says Security Planning Inadequate
Suggests "non-militaristic" Alternative emphasizes the importance of the big, bad, the existence of the local law enforcement agencies when a stall occurs in the system.

The "militarization" of the police force is a problem, the study says. This problem is characterized by a "militarized" approach to police work, with the emphasis on the use of force and the use of the language of war.

The study concludes that the police force should be restructured to be more like a community service agency, with the emphasis on preventative measures and the use of non-violent techniques.

In 1935, there was this island in the middle of Europe, and when the war came, it was occupied by the Russians. The people of the island were forced to leave their homes and live in the streets. The island was called Minskys.

In the study, the researchers argue that the police force is too often used as a tool of the state, rather than as a service to the community.

The study calls for a rethinking of the role of the police force, with an emphasis on community policing and the use of non-violent techniques.

Booters Lose to Harpur, 2-1, on Miskick

On Saturday, Albany's Volleyball never lost its hustle defense as it played the best its good, as it entered the second half of the season with only two losses. The team was beat by Harpur and lost 2-1.

The game started with a goal from Karl Pedersen despite Dane goalie John Gin. Of victory was a miskick by a Harpur defender.

Coach Schaeffer said that the team played well in the first half. "The players were very excited and determined," he added. "We played very well in the first half and were able to take the lead."

The second half was a different story. Harpur tied the score a few minutes into the second half. "We were not able to maintain our lead," said Schaeffer. "We were unable to score after that until the very end of the game."

In the end, Harpur won the game 2-1. "This was a tough game," said Schaeffer. "We will have to work harder in the future to come out on top."

Which Way Security?

Security at Albany State now rests on a crucial stand. Once a network of "safe areas," whose duties included the enforcement of campus regulations but also served as a sanctuary for students to engage in political activities, is now governed by a new security threat. The shift in security at the university is not insignificant; it poses serious questions which the university, perhaps, should not even be asking itself: Should the University, perhaps, should not even be asking itself: Should the...
