Our Policy

In nearly every change of an administration, it is customary to either support the new policy, or to reject it. Our policy is to support the new policy, and at the same time to maintain the old policy. We feel that there is no basis for change. The only thing that is wrong with the new policy is that it is not our policy. We are not here to change it. We are here to support it and to maintain it.

In the past, some people have designed themselves judges and others judges, although their designations have been valid, fair and helpful—but by the same token, much of it has been flaky. We are not about to undertake anything that we do not find valid, fair and helpful. But, by the same token, much of it has been flaky. We are not here to undertake anything that we do not find valid, fair and helpful. But, by the same token, much of it has been flaky. We are not here to undertake anything that we do not find valid, fair and helpful. But, by the same token, much of it has been flaky.
