The Disc You Buy May Be Your Last

Do you remember when it was still possible to go to a record or music store and buy virtually any record you wanted? That was before Amazon.com entered the picture and changed the retail landscape forever. Today, with the rise of online music streaming and digital downloading, physical records are a niche item that many collectors still seek out.

In the 1970s, when Jay Gissen was a young record store employee, the world of record sales was quite different. In this article, Gissen shares his memories of working in a record store and the challenges that came with it.

Excerpt from Jay Gissen's article:

George Thorogood brought his band to the University of Michigan, and the crowd at the Michigan's Coliseum. Opening for the group was a Boston-based band named Reckless.

Friday January 19th

When Thorogood came on, he brandished a smile. He changed into some worn-out clothes, a hat, and a pair of sunglasses. He took the microphone and began to sing. The crowd went wild. He played several songs, including a cover of Chuck Berry's "Johnny B. Goode." The audience was on their feet throughout the performance.

Stevens Crashes On Back to Earth

O n this new release, Cat Stevens returns to his classic folk sound. The album is a departure from his previous work, which was heavily influenced by rock and roll. Instead, this album focuses on the singer-songwriter aspects of his music, with acoustic guitar and simple arrangements. The songs are more introspective and personal, reflecting Stevens' experiences and feelings. The album includes tracks like "Father and Son," "Mother," and "Tea for the Tillerman."

The health focus on the campus is a serious one. When the fee was "repealed", SUNY students gained victory. They still had to pay the fee for another semester (the fourth straight), and they would not get it back. As for next year, well, we know what the Governor has in store.

Caray fanned and dropted student leaders on the health fee. This showed us how news is augmented by the current situation.

The efforts by the Albany Student Unions en SASE are undoubtedly well intentioned and sincere. If history is a yardstick, however, they are doomed to fail — it's not easy to fight the capitalists.

Behind Ahern, Swimmers Win

The Danes have eight indoor contests scheduled for the season; we have a very good squad." said Coach Bob Oppenheimer, 1100 yards last fall. "We're not quite as fast as we were last year, but we're making up for it with a more weighted emphasis on the distance," said Mark Lavan, a senior, who placed sixth in the 800 meters at the Capital Union Meet and already has qualified for the All-Star meet. "Indoor is really a whole different ballgame; you've got the indoor track and you've got the more intense atmosphere. We're just really looking forward to the season," he added.
