Tough Break” Helps Netmen Edge Middlebury

By Larry Kahn

A "tough break" was cited by Larry Young, the Albany State men's tennis coach, as the deciding factor in Saturday's match against Middlebury.

"The matches themselves could have gone either way," said Young, who has been coaching the team for three years. "But what they did do was lose." He was referring to Middlebury's two doubles teams, which were swept by Albany.

"It was a day of almosts," Young said. "The Danes had a chance to win, but they didn't." He pointed to Middlebury's second singles player, who lost to Albany's Barry Levine, 6-4.

"It was two good teams playing," Young said. "Middlebury had the edge, but we were able to hold our own." He credited Albany's doubles teams, which won their matches against Middlebury.

On the court, it was a day of close calls. Albany's doubles team, led by junior Chris Eichen and senior Rich Oerller, won a close 8-6 match over Middlebury's team.

"They played real well," commented Young. "I thought we were going to lose, but we didn't." He said Albany's doubles team played well together, but they needed to work on their serve.

What is HAP?
The Human Awareness Program is students, faculty and administration working together to break down the barriers that exist among them. HAP atttempts to increase interaction among the various groups of the University so that they may truly become a community.

Too many of the 20,000 people living, learning and working here feel that this place is too impersonal. They are a number in the big, cold, bureaucracy.
But this is a University. With the diversity that exists here, each and every one of us has a valuable, individual contribution to make.

These are the days for professors and classes to take time away from the regular curriculum and get in some informal conversation. Participate in these events, take time in class to discuss current issues, each others' backgrounds, goals, or the University itself. Whatever your own style is, try sharing it with some new people. You'd be surprised at how much better a university can be when we escape from roles, build some sp's and more traditions -- like HAP.

Following are individual statements from all the candidates submitted previously to the ASP
First, the presidential candidates
As group leaders we have found SA unresponsive to our needs. Their understanding of our goals and projects has been negligible. Since SA has no knowledge of what happens in our respective groups, the budgeting process has been a difficult one, for both us and SA. We feel that we have affected many more students than SA proper, yet SA only seeks us out when they need our help. For these reasons we are supporting Jane Sidor for SA president since she has been responsive to our needs. She knows our problems and has dealt with our issues as an active member of several SA groups. We will not be ignored. We urge you, as concerned students, to pick up your tax cards and show your united support for Jane Sidor.

Thank you.

The Crossgates Story

How Green Was My Valley

Writer of the season's most anticipated novel, Laura Florentine, has announced that her latest book, "The Crossgates Story," will be released on October 15th. The novel, set in the same region as her previous work, "The Crossgates Story," follows the lives of several characters as they navigate the challenges of building a new shopping mall in a small town.

Laura Florentine

The 67-year-old Florentine, known for her prolific writing career, has been a staple of the literary world for decades. Her previous works have received critical acclaim and have been translated into multiple languages. "The Crossgates Story" is expected to be her most successful work to date, with early reviews praising its depth and realism.

The novel is set in a small town where a new shopping mall is being planned. The project is met with resistance from local residents, who fear it will disrupt the town's character and damage the environment. The story follows the struggles of the town's residents, as well as the mall's developers, as they try to find a way to balance development and conservation.

Florentine has used her experiences as a journalist and writer to create a compelling narrative that explores themes of development, environmentalism, and community. Her previous works have been lauded for their ability to engage readers and provoke thought, and "The Crossgates Story" is expected to continue this tradition.

Florentine's latest novel is available for pre-order now and will be released on October 15th. For more information, visit www.lauraflorentinebooks.com.

Smaller Than Both Of Them

I've never left this room, and I'm not sure why. Daryl Hall has always been my favorite vocalist, his voice as soothing as a warm summer breeze. The backstreet is a haven for fans of his music. His solo compositions, featured on the album 'Sacred Songs,' are a testament to his talent.

Hall and Oates, now officially a duo, have always been known for their harmonies and catchy melodies. Their latest album, 'Smaller Than Both Of Them,' is a collection of songs that showcase their unique style.

The album begins with a strong opening track, 'The Voice That I Used To Know.' The lyrics are a reflection of Hall's personal journey, as he explores themes of love, loss, and redemption. The acoustic guitar and piano create a warm and intimate atmosphere, perfect for a rainy day.

One of the standout tracks on the album is 'If I Needed You.' The song features Hall's signature harmonies with Robb Grubman and John Oates. The simple arrangement allows the vocals to shine, creating a sense of nostalgia that feels both familiar and fresh.

Overall, 'Smaller Than Both Of Them' is a deeply personal album that resonates with fans of Hall and Oates. The music is well-crafted, with each song telling a unique story. Whether you're a long-time fan or a newcomer, this album is sure to leave you with a sense of satisfaction and appreciation for the timeless art of Daryl Hall and Robb Grubman.

Brian Levy

As an arts enthusiast and critic, Brian Levy probably has no idea what it's like to have a show on T.V. But he found some more interesting programs and characters with which to associate. Like Bob Newhart, Levy found that he can get a lot of enjoyment out of many programs that are not immediately obvious. Of course, Levy is interested in the arts, and he likes the programs that he finds to be most entertaining. The Fugitive's unique appeal is its ability to involve the audience without resorting to gimmicks. It is a well-crafted program that successfully combines drama and comedy.

Mark Lafayette

As far as involvement goes, Mark Lafayette is the most qualified candidate for the leadership of the Student Association. Lafayette served as the Vice President of Student Services, and as a member of the Student Senate, he was responsible for overseeing the budget, the Student Senate, and the Student Association. Lafayette has a strong commitment to the Student Association, and he is determined to make sure that the Student Association is successful.

Dean Betz

Keep a close eye on Dean Betz in the future. He has a long way to go and he plays an active role in the Association. He clearly understands the importance of the Student Association, and he is determined to make sure that the Student Association is successful.

Thursdays (beginning), Mars, who claims, "I don't like to lose," got the better of the best teams and schools. Unaware of this, Newman, after falling behind in the first set to Vassar's Anne Borish, battled back from three missed shots all over the court. Despite Newman's aggressive play in the first set, Vassar's Anne Borish took the lead, 4-1, and soon extended her advantage until Newman was out of it by the end of the set. Newman's partner, Lisa Sims, lost her first set, 5-7, but won the second set, 7-5. She then beat her opponent, 6-4. Newman's partner dropped the second set, 6-3, but came back to win the third set, 6-3. Newman's partner then took the lead, 6-4. Newman's partner couldn't hold the lead in the first set. This set would decide the crucial third set. She came back to win it, 6-4. Newman considered it a decisive match for Albany. This is the second set of many matches played at Albany. Newman, after falling behind in the first set, won the second set, 7-5, and then the match, 6-7, and finally won the match, 6-2, 6-3.

Problems Plague Women As Softball Team Drops Two

By Donn Behavior

Coach Alistair, lack of communication between players, lack of proper guidance, and " Totally terrific" say what have been plaguing the Albany women's softball team. The team has played two out of five games this past week, suffering two losses and one win.

One of the most disturbing aspects of the game was that the Albany women's softball team was 2-3 and 2-5 in their last two games respectively. The team started off with a 1-2 loss at Russell-Sage, followed by a 3-4 loss at New York University.

It happened on one of the rare times this year the Danes had to nudge in the final moments of regulation time, but it was enough to bring Union to 0-2 in the season opener. The Union had a chance to tie the game in the final moments, but a key play by the Danes kept them from doing so.
