Morning fire wrecks Seneca suite

By Andrew Caoyn

A fire on the third floor of Indian Quad's Seneca Hall Wednesday evening left students racing outside for fear as firefighters extinguished the blaze. There were no reported injuries and damage seemed limited to the suite where the fire erupted, but the cause of the fire is under investigation.

The fire was called at 8:30 a.m. by a student who said a fire hydrant in his room was stuck, and that he was concerned about water pressure. The fire was quickly extinguished and there were no reports of injuries or damage to any other suite.

According to a SUNY spokesman, a tenant of the suite was reported to the Office of Housing and Residence Life (OHL) and was asked to vacate the building immediately. The tenant was reported to the OHR and was charged with violation of campus rules.

No other fires were reported in the building.

Profs rally over missing contract

By Joseph Fusco

Members of the United University Professions (UUP), exercising what one professor called the "right to strike" demonstrated in front of the Campus Center Thursday afternoon to protest stalled contract negotiations with the Government.

The demonstration, which lasted one hour, drew mostly 30 people, including professors, students and university professionals.

The purpose of the picketing, according to Mary Nowell, secretary of the Albany chapter of UUP and SUNYA English women's group director, was to focus attention on the negotiations issues.

"A strike is the last resort," Nowell said, "but we are willing to take action within the limits of the labor agreement to bring about a resolution to the contract dispute." said John Bopp, president of the Albany chapter of UUP. "We want the best terms for the teachers on the campus, who are members of the union," Nowell said.

One of the issues of contention is administrative flexibility.

"The issue of flexibility might be an underlying problem," said Bopp. "We believe that the state is trying to take away our ability to manage our workload." Nowell said, adding that the union is willing to negotiate on this issue.

"This basically shows the state and the administration that we are willing to take action within the labor agreement to bring about a resolution," Bopp said.

"Until we get the state to negotiate in good faith, we will continue to protest the state's lack of action," Nowell said.

"We want to get back to the bargaining table," Bopp said.

"The state can't pull the wool over our eyes," Nowell said, adding that the state has made a "clear offer" to the union.

"We are ready and willing to go back to the bargaining table," Bopp said.

UUP and a SUNYA English professor, was mostly "intransigence," Taylor stressed the fact that UUP had not had a contract since June 30.

"We are currently negotiating with the state," Taylor said, adding that UUP had not had a contract since June 30.

"We hope to get a new contract signed before the end of the year," Taylor said, adding that UUP had not had a contract since June 30.

Teleton chooses three charities

By Andrea Gorman

For the first time in its history, Teleton has chosen three charities to benefit from this year's efforts.

According to Telethon co-chair Suzanne Murphy, these organizations were selected based on their ability to help those in need and their impact on the community.

One Step to Safety

This organization aims to prevent child abuse by providing resources and support to families in need. It offers programs such as counseling, education, and support groups.

Families First

A program focused on helping families dealing with addiction. They offer support groups, counseling, and resources to help families overcome addiction.

United Way

A broad-based organization that supports various causes through community campaigns and fundraisers. They work towards improving the quality of life for all people in the community.

Grave patrol seeks desecration hell

By Ken Dombroski

Wide student waves at SUNY are being held to protest the proposed closure of the chaplaincy service at the university. The action was organized by the Student Action Association (SAA) and the Student Action Committee (SAC).

The protest was held in response to the announcement made by University President Charles H. F. Abt, which stated that the chaplaincy service would be moved to the Department of Religion and Philosophy.

The SAA and SAC are calling for students to refrain from attending classes and participating in university activities until the chaplaincy service is reinstated and the students have a say in its future.

Alternative programming after '21-eyed'

By David Speiering

For the first time in a generation, SUNY officers have not been able to hold their annual '21-eyed' event. The holiday tradition, which has been celebrated by students and faculty for decades, was cancelled due to the COVID-19 pandemic.

The event was scheduled to take place on the night of the full moon in December, but it was ultimately postponed until next year.

SA racks up highest voter reg. figures in nation

By Brian Martone

The Student Action Committee (SAC) has set a new national record for registering voters, with more than 10,000 students registered to vote for the upcoming election.

The SAC, a branch of the Student Action Association (SAA), is working to register as many students as possible in order to ensure they have a voice in the upcoming election.

The SAC has been working with local organizations and electoral officials to make sure that students have the necessary information and resources to register to vote.

Black underrepresented
In a recent report, the American Council on Education found that in 1985, black students made up 9.5 percent of the enrollment in college academic programs across the nation. This percentage is less than half of the United States' population, which is comprised of over 40 percent black students.

According to the report, American universities and colleges are suffering from "a lack of minority representation" in black student enrollments.

I'm for

(Bill in blank)

Our country was found upon the basis of government by the people. It operates, in practice, in the service of the people, so long as the people choose to be served.

The stockholders disdain the public welfare in favor of short-time, small-time, bottom-line profits for the company's management. This is a concern that is more than a factor in what you might call your participation in the policymaking process.

The stockholder could just as readily read, "I oppose the Gramm-Rudman cuts," or, "I don't believe women's rights are in order," or, "I think large numbers of young people who are doing drugs seem to be in order."

If most of us were to vote, the city would be forced to further recognize our power as a voting constituency

Voting may be a private, quiet process between you and the machine, but you can find a way to speak more loudly for yourself as a person and as a citizen.

Vote! Vote! Vote!

Electum Day, Elections Day whenever, election day...

— Bill Shakespeare

More is the first time in November with another election day around the corner. I'm sure most of you know that this is a serious matter. Right, wrong, secret, and grossly dishonest injection that it is election time and the time to cast your vote. There's no doubt in my mind that all of you have planned to do so already, so I think I'll let the column take a bit of a different direction.

Through the years many students have traveled to the United States and cast their ballots. Some have returned home to vote, others have remained abroad. The United States is a country of great diversity, and the right to vote is a fundamental right.

A student is a citizen of the United States. They have the right to vote on election day, regardless of their age. However, there are certain eligibility requirements that must be met in order to vote. These requirements vary by state and include factors such as being a U.S. citizen, meeting the state's age requirement (usually 18 or older), and not being convicted of a felony.

To vote in an election, a student must register to vote. The registration process involves filling out an application and submitting it to a local election office. The student may also vote by absentee ballot if they are unable to vote in person on election day.

The Importance of Voting

Voting is an important responsibility that comes with the privilege of being a citizen. By casting your ballot, you have the opportunity to influence the decisions that impact your life and the lives of those around you.

In addition to the wristband policy, bar owners have another day out of the year with no mail or government services.

Technology and Politics

Today, technology plays a significant role in the political process. Social media platforms and online news sources provide a platform for citizens to engage in political discussions and share information.

For example, Facebook and Twitter allow individuals to connect with others who share similar political views and participate in discussions about political issues. These platforms enable citizens to stay informed about political events and engage in conversations with elected officials and candidates.

Online voting also becomes a reality today, allowing people to cast their votes remotely. However, there are concerns about the security and privacy of online voting systems, and the potential for hacking and manipulation.

Voting is a fundamental right and a crucial component of a democratic society. It is essential for citizens to participate in the political process by exercising their right to vote and holding elected officials accountable for their actions.

Let's remember the importance of voting and ensure that all eligible citizens are registered and able to cast their ballots in upcoming elections.

In the coming weeks, I encourage all citizens to register to vote if they have not already done so. With the 2024 presidential election approaching, it is crucial that we ensure high voter turnout and a strong democratic process.

By participating in the democratic process, we can make our voices heard and contribute to a better future for our community and country.

Thank you for your attention and for making the decision to vote.

Sincerely,

[Your Name]
Self-named liberals insinure in eradicating minority stereotypes

By E. Paul Stewart

Before I began with the theme of this week's column, I wanted to get something off my chest, as I read it. As E. Paul Stewart, the new Minority Affairs Editor, I want to contribute to the Albany Student Press. I have been involved in a number of activities here on this campus, and I am an active member of the Albany State University Black Alliance and Council for Minority Affairs. I feel that it is important to voice minority concerns and solidarity awareness on this campus.

There are a great deal of problems that minority students are faced with on this campus and in the community. Among these are affirmative action, education, housing, and numerous other socio-economic problems. There is one major problem, though, which is the problem of stereotypes.

This year, a number of people claim they "understand" the problems that minority students experience, "know what it must be like," and claim they are "sensitive." Those who claim they understand the problems are the ones who come from white middle-class backgrounds and these people are the least equipped to understand these problems.

There are people who do not see minority students as equals and view them as inferior to themselves. However, those who are not aware of these problems cannot help but to see them as inferior. Therefore, it is not surprising that there is a great deal of misunderstanding between minority and non-minority students.

A great deal of misunderstanding between minority and non-minority students stems from a lack of information about the problems that minority students face. Minority students are aware of the problems in their communities and are willing to voice these problems if they are allowed to do so. However, it is important to understand that minority students are more knowledgeable about these problems than anyone else.

In conclusion, I feel that it is important for minority students to be given the opportunity to express their concerns. We have been involved in a number of activities here on this campus and I hope that this will continue to be the case. I believe that there is a great deal of potential to create solidarity on this campus and I am excited to be a part of that process.

Great Danes look for revenge against Hofstra

By Marc Herman

The return of Saturday's game at University Field, the Albany State Great Danes and the Hofstra Flying Dutchmen are driven by two very opposite forces.

While the implications of a Great Danes loss will prove fatal for their playoff hopes, the Dutchmen simply want to have fun.

"During the game, if you look at the scoreboard, you're on edge," said Bob Dane spikers to play in SUNYACs. "We have to be prepared to play, but we don't have to be too serious about it."

"I would love to see that kind of game again," said Dane. "The students will have a lot of fun."

"It was a game we didn't expect to play," said Dane. "But we're going to do our best."

"We're all set and ready to go," said Dane. "We've been working hard to get ready for this game."

"I think we have a good chance," said Dane. "But we have to be prepared for anything."

T his week marked the 70th anniversary of the Human hostage crisis. This event has long been highlighted as an attention-grabbing political act. While the public's desire has not been to commemorate this particular act, any person who has ever lived in a country that has been historically referred to as "the enemy," needs to recognize the impact this event has had on current events.

This will have been a very significant milestone in terms of the American government's response to domestic terrorism. As we look back at the events of the hostage crisis, we can see how they have impacted our current political climate.

AmERICA Taken hostage: then and now

No one will deny that the Iranian hostage crisis of 1979 was the most dramatic hostage crisis in modern history, and that two Americans who spent fifty-three days being hostages of Iran became heroes. We were just ordinary guys, but we filled our roles.

As the United States banked above the clouds, one of the first things that came to mind was this: "It’s almost like a dream to be able to fly so high.” The plane was so fast, and the world so far away. It was a great feeling of freedom... but also a feeling of being on top of the world.

It was during this flight that I became aware of how much I had taken for granted before. I had always felt safe and secure, but now I realized how vulnerable we all are. The plane was a symbol of our country’s technological prowess, but also of the fragility of our way of life.

As the plane flew higher and higher, I thought about the people on the ground, the families that were waiting for us to return home. They had no idea what was happening, but I knew they were praying for our safe return.

As we flew closer to Iran, I felt a mix of excitement and nervousness. It was a strange feeling, like being in a movie. I knew that we were about to cross into a country that was not our own, and that everything could change in an instant.

And then, just as I was about to land, I saw the Iranian Embassy, and I knew that our journey was about to end. It was a surreal experience, like stepping into another world.

As we stepped off the plane, I saw the Iranian guards, and I realized that we were not in the United States anymore. It was a triumph, but also a difficult moment. We had survived the ordeal, but we still faced the challenges of being back in a foreign country.

Yet, it was also a time of celebration, a time to reunite with loved ones and to share our experiences. It was a time of rebuilding, a time to learn from our ordeal and to come back stronger.

As the months passed, I continued to feel the effects of my time in captivity. It was a strange feeling, like being in a dream. I had always felt safe and secure, but now I realized how vulnerable we all are.

As I looked back on my experiences, I realized that I had learned a lot. I had learned about the importance of family, of friends, and of our country. It was a time of growth, a time to reflect on what I had experienced.

As I look back on my time as a hostage, I realize that it was a time of change. It was a time of learning, a time of growth. It was a time when I became a different person.

As I think about my time as a hostage, I realize that it was a time of change. It was a time of learning, a time of growth. It was a time when I became a different person.

Whalen wins decisively in Tuesday’s election

Students prove to be no-shows at polls

By Ken Domont

Albany Mayor Thomas Whalen won quite the win on Tuesday as he ran away with the election. The 43-year-old freshman mayor took 71 percent of the vote, compared to 29 percent for his opponent.

Whalen, who is a Democrat, has been a flameout campaigner and a strong supporter of the city’s fiscal policies, which have been praised by many residents.

In other local elections, Helen Eagle won the seat for the city’s public works committee, and the Ada City Council will have another man in 2022.

Meanwhile, the student turnout was disappointing, with 12 percent of eligible voters casting their ballots.

Disciplinary action against University of SUNY students will be more strictly enforced as a result of a ruling by the American Association of University Professors.

The ruling, which is expected to be announced later this week, will make it easier for the university to suspend or dismiss students who engage in disciplinary action.

The university has been facing criticism for its handling of student discipline, particularly in cases involving alcohol use.

Kegs to be banned under Pogue proposal

By Karen E. Beck

The student association is expected to introduce a proposal to ban kegs and beer balls on campus, effective next semester.

The proposal, which will be discussed at the next student association meeting, is expected to be voted on in December.

In order to encourage students to register their kegs, the university will begin a new campaign to educate the student body about the risks of keggering.

“We’re simply trying to remove the temptation to overconsume,” said Frank Pogue, the university’s new director of public affairs.

“Last year, we saw a record number of cases involving alcohol use. This year, we hope to keep that number down and encourage responsible behavior.”
