Mulliner Nights

By F. G. Wadehse

Book Review

"Enter a parlor and start your dinner dancing on the coup. " So starts that "melodramatic copy" at the head of this new novel of Whistler's. Which is quite going to show Mr. Mulliner up at the Angel's Rest. Under the direction of the publisher, the romantic tale of a young girl and the model of her life, and a Princess of London will be shown, and the same place tomorrow night. The author, D. Whitehead, laments the inhumanity of the modern man and man's ignorance of the arts.

"There is an inner gaiety that is infectious, and as you watch, fascinated through the eyes of Philip, the mind begins to understand, and the spirit of Philip begins to realize."

The exalted woman, a novel in two volumes, which is not particularly artful, well-written, and well-done, is one of the best for the American market. The hero is a charming figure, and the author has a talent for creating and maintaining atmosphere. It is a combination of the comic and the serious, which is a very rare combination.

"The Gold Maker," a play about the Romantic Age, has been produced in New York. "The Gold Maker" is an inner gaiety that is infectious, and as you watch, fascinated through the eyes of Philip, the mind begins to understand, and the spirit of Philip begins to realize.
