The highly publicized match between Albany and rival RPI in a track event in the Carrier Dome on Saturday afternoon turned out as the Engineers had hoped and to the delight of the thousands of fans who packed the arena.

Albany's Matt Van Horn, the top qualifier in the 400-meters run, second place runner-up to RPI's Mike Ragan in the 800-meters run, and the top qualifier in the 800-meters run, was able to take second in the event with a time of 1:50.04 and set a new record.

On top of that, Albany's Michael Ragan was the top qualifier in the 400-meters run, running the event in 48.04 and setting a new state record.

Although 48,626 Metaphiles centered out to Shea to witness Tom Seaver's return in person, we're wondering how many of these will stay for the comfort of their homes in the future and how many will brave the elements of Shea. As for us, we're like anyone else-most of the time we'd rather have our feet on the table, engaged with Oreos while watching a Mets telecast, but there will be times when our sense of adventure leads us out to Flushing.

False Frontiers

"The Skin of Our Teeth" is not just a story of family history but a parable of human nature. It's the tale of an American man, Nels Sycamore, who finds himself at the Crossroads of History. The play opens in New York in 1922 and closes in New York in 2122, spanning 200 years of American history. The characters in the play, including Nels, his wife, and their children, are brought together in a series of family scenes that explore the themes of love, loss, and redemption.

Beyond the rhetoric

The surface rhetoric provided in political campaigns can be misleading, often designed to catch the public's attention rather than providing any meaningful insight into the candidates' actual policies. This is a common practice in political discourse, where the real issues are often buried beneath a layer of persuasive language and empty promises.

In the Student Association elections, many students are led to believe that the candidates' platforms are the most important factor in deciding who to vote for. However, the true worth of a candidate cannot be determined solely by the content of their speeches or their campaign promises. The real value lies in the ability of a candidate to carry out their proposed policies once in office.

Candidates often promise to cut tuition fees, increase funding for student organizations, or improve the quality of student life. However, these promises are often made without any concrete plans or strategies to achieve these goals. As a result, when a candidate is elected, they may find that they are unable to fulfill their campaign promises due to limited resources or other unforeseen circumstances.

It is important for students to look beyond the rhetoric and examine the candidates' track records and their experiences in leadership positions. By doing so, students can make an informed decision based on the candidates' actual abilities and past performance, rather than being swayed by empty promises.

In conclusion, political rhetoric can be a powerful tool for candidates, but it is important for students to look beyond the surface and consider the candidates' true qualifications and abilities. By doing so, students can ensure that they are making a responsible and informed decision in the upcoming election.

Sobriety, higher tuition & you

If it's true that the brains have a secret panel of some sort, then when you feel the brain's warnings, it's time to go blank.

L. S. Lane

The real issue is not just the amount of money a university spends on a student, but how it is spent. The real issue is the quality of education that is provided to the students.

If you're a student, you want to know that your tuition fees are being spent on the things that matter. You want to know that the university is providing a high-quality education that is worth the money you're paying. If the university is not providing a quality education, then the money you're paying is not being spent wisely.
