Albany not so bad

Albany is a city that really offers something different from what you'd expect. For instance, it's not just a city with good weather - though it can be, at times - but also a place where people actually care about their community. The city is clean, the streets are well-lit, and there's a feeling of safety and security that's hard to find in many other cities.

However, there are some issues that need to be addressed. The downtown area is in a state of flux, with many stores closing down or moving out to the suburbs. This has led to a decrease in foot traffic and a decrease in the number of people who are willing to spend money here. It's a good thing that the city is trying to revitalize the downtown area, but they need to do it in a way that will benefit everyone.

In terms of education, the University of Albany is one of the best institutions in the state. The campus is beautiful, and the faculty is knowledgeable and passionate. The city is also home to several other colleges and universities, which adds to the diversity of the area.

In terms of culture, there are several museums and art galleries that are worth checking out. The New York State Museum is one of the best in the country, and the Albany Institute of History and Art has a collection that's second to none. There are also several theaters and concert halls that host a variety of events throughout the year.

Overall, Albany is a great place to live and work. It's a city that has something for everyone, and it's a place where you can feel at home. So why not give it a try? You might be surprised by what you find.

The Rule of Unreason

"I don't want to go on jail, but it's time somebody took a stand..." So begins a protestor of the Vietnam War. We have come to recognize that when our leaders make decisions, we often find ourselves in a dilemma. Do we follow their lead or do we question their motives? This is the central issue of "The Rule of Unreason" by Peter Bridge.

Breaking Down All Those Walls

"But that's the problem, every time I take a whack at it... Freedom rings!"

In "The New Street People," by Norman Rockweil, we see a new generation of people challenging the status quo. They are breaking down walls and creating new communities. This essay explores the cultural and political changes that are occurring in this time of rapid social transformation.

"The New Street People"
Helmrich Gives Recital

by Andy Pollak

One is in a surreal kind of dream, from the stage which represents one great country. Somewhere in the desert of the imagination, we are transported to a world of music that is both real and fantastical.

Doris Helmrich, who played the solo violin in a long-stream of Monday night's program, is a perfect embodiment of this dream world. Her playing was a fantastic, original, and as well-known to the right side of the music as her beauty, she is a kaleidoscope of National music.

The most unconventional feature about Helmrich's violin, in that Sibelius' Violin Concerto in D minor, a work written for violin and orchestra, was performed. The orchestra was composed of international performers, and was conducted by Daniel Barenboim, who is well-known for his interpretations of the Sibelius Violin Concerto.

The concert was held in the Concert Hall of the University of Arizona, and was part of the annual performance series. The audience was captivated by the performance, and many listeners expressed their admiration for Helmrich's virtuosity and technical skill.

The concert concluded with the performance of Sibelius' Violin Concerto, which received a standing ovation from the audience. The performance was received with great enthusiasm, and many listeners commented on the beauty and grace of Helmrich's playing.

In conclusion, the performance of Sibelius' Violin Concerto was a remarkable achievement, and a true demonstration of the power of music to transport us to new worlds. The audience was left with a sense of wonder and awe, and a profound appreciation for the art of violin playing.
It gets to the point where the Albany Symphony is the world's best, but it isn't. They played a concert here Tuesday night which demonstrated their top form. It is a different place to listen, the music not only being played conversely, but also being played in an ensemble of more than five. The Albany Symphony is now a very fine orchestra. \n\nAn entire generation of American music is being performed here when this country was once partial to Hungarian and Russian music at best and worst at all. Well, the music has been written and it is being written, and never was there such a thing as a great music. It could really happen anywhere. The public was never tuned in to a great American music at the time of its birth. The public was never tuned in to the public at the time of its birth. Because the public was never tuned in to the public at the time of its birth. It is a different place to listen, the music not only being played conversely, but also being played in an ensemble of more than five. The Albany Symphony is now a very fine orchestra.

Adapting tires does not mean that you have to be a tires. There are a few things you can do to keep your tires in good shape.

The first thing you need to do is to keep your tires clean. This means washing them regularly with soap and water. You can also use a tire shine to help protect them from the sun and other elements.

The second thing you need to do is to check your tire pressure. It should be checked at least once a month, and it is best to have it checked while the tires are cool. If your tire pressure is too high, it can cause the tires to wear out more quickly.

The third thing you need to do is to avoid driving on rough roads. This can cause the tires to wear out more quickly.

Finally, you should have your tires rotated periodically. This helps to wear them out evenly.

By following these tips, you can keep your tires in good shape and avoid the need for repair or replacement.

C Davis: The Birth of the Cool

by Adrin Schenke

Note that Mike Davis has achieved an amount ofpopularitywhich is usually accorded jazz musicians. It is more than interesting to see someone else look at the various stages through which the music has gone in order to get where he is. Recently released album The Complete Birth of the Cool (Capitol M 1053) allows one to do exactly that. This album was recorded by one of the most influential groups of the ‘40s. This album shows how much Davis has changed. When this album was first released it began with the call "cool," and it showed how much Davis has changed. This album allows one to see the development of the cool jazz movement.

The arrangements by Gil Evans are highly original and complete. They are not just soft and billowy. Davis' arrangement is related to one's own style and intensity. The album is balanced and full of excitement. "Woody" and John Lewis are also faithful to this recording.

This recording, another with Gil Evans, has been made a few times in the last few years. Davis is highly respected by the recording industry. He is a considered a work of art and his solo work is extraordinarily complex. His work is a tremendous influence in the way of composition. His solo work has become the center of some very remarkable new recordings. In the recording itself, there is a great deal of high energy and one can see how the Jewish influence is captured in his music.

Swimmer's Goal: Winning Year

As Andrea at 157 1199.

The Albany State swimming team opens their home season tonight against Colby College.

The Great Danes have eight returning swimmers and eight new men. The team has been coached by Coach Garcia for the past three years. He expects them to do well this season.

One of the team's goals is to improve their overall performance. They hope to achieve their best shape ever, despite many injuries the team suffers. Coach Garcia still feels that every year there are not enough swimmers to fill the team.

This year's team has already improved, but a few injuries could spell trouble. Coach Garcia has yet to see how well they perform and how they will handle the team.

The Albany State swimming team is expected to do well this season. Coach Garcia still feels that there are not enough swimmers to fill the team.

Number of Empty Beds Increases Here

by Diana M. Cymper

As of September 20, 1972, the State University of New York at Albany has 415 empty beds. This total is given by Mr. Felix Sirotkin, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, does not include Puerto Rican students. Why the number of vacant beds? Sirotkin offered these suggestions:

- At this time, there are not many vacant beds in dormitories. A survey is being taken to determine how many "new" students are enrolled.
- Twenty-six students have been given up to offices since the opening of Indian Quad. This is a decrease of vacancies from 202 to 76. This decrease is due to the 202 students who are living in Fulton Hall instead of in dormitories. In addition, there are additional spaces caused by the opening of Indian Quad.
- There are 489 of these located around the University.

Puerto Rican Studies Director Says:

Departmental Status by End of Next Semester;
Too Few Puerto Rican Professionals Employed Here

by John Perlack

Item 1 is the aftermath of a tumultuous confrontation between Puerto Rican students and administrators, the Puerto Rican studies program is expanding toward departmental status. This event, expected about April by the interim director of the program, Antonio Perez, will not likely attract the attention and hostility that the early crises for a program cost with in 1971.

Perez told this reporter that Mayor Hunsecker, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, authorized him to form a committee to develop the program into a department. Perez is also working as a committee selecting a full-time director for the program.

What follows is a summary of the answers given by Perez to questions about the program and his role in it.

Why do Puerto Rican students need a Puerto Rican studies program (department)?

Perez highlighted the needs of students who want a department for so few students that they may complete a major, not presently offered. He estimates that about 30 students are prepared and waiting for the opportunity to pursue a major.

Perez also spoke of Puerto Rican students seeking something they can relate to in the University. Puerto Rican students "realized there was nothing in the university they could claim as their own. They want to find out more about themselves in a university setting.

In any setting, they need something they can identify with." Perez noted that the growth of the Office of Puerto Rican Academic Support (OPRAS) department encouraged Puerto Rican students.

Perez replied that the "number of Puerto Rican students is constantly growing."

About 50 Puerto Rican students attend SUNYA now, according to a formula used by the Educational Opportunity Program, about one third of the freshmen students accepted through the EOP must be Puerto Rican, according to one third of about 20 Puerto Rican students.

He emphasized that the program is for "the whole community." Despite the fact that the Puerto Rican studies program has not been publicized "at all," increasing numbers of non-Puerto Rican students are taking courses in it. "I don't expect only Puerto Rican students will major and minor in Puerto Rican studies," Perez added.

The importance of Puerto Rican as a growing minority in New York State was also cited. Puerto Rican comprise one-sixteenth of the total state population, Perez stated.

Sirotkin Talks Tenure With Council

by Ellyn Steinberger

Vice President Philip Sirotkin was the invited guest at last week's Central Council Meeting. His topic was tenure.

Sirotkin informed the Council members that SUNYA presently has about 60% of its instructional faculty teaching. The norm for Universities and four year colleges is in the 50%-60% range. He was talking about no more than 50%-60% should be tenure.

He stated that with a "negative" budget pressure you can't add new faculty and programs without existing programs.

The decision given to the President's office to the Chancellor and the Board of Trustees who confer the actual tenure. Sirotkin said that the criteria of teaching effectiveness, scholarly activity, University-community service, professional growth and development, and research. The case goes through several steps in the department before it goes to a student-faculty committee on the college.

From there it goes to the University Council on Promotions. The Council makes its recommendation to the President of the University. Sirotkin emphasized that the point of tenure decision is entirely an advisory recommendation. The President makes the final decision, but usually the University Council's decision is accepted.

The decision goes from the President's office to the Chancellor and the Board of Trustees who confer the actual tenure. Sirotkin said that the criteria of teaching effectiveness is determined by student evaluation. One of the weaknesses of this is no uniform method of evaluation. Each department has its own system. An effort was made to standardize this area, but it didn't succeed.

Concerning student input on tenure, Sirotkin was careful to rephrase the word that "Teaching effectiveness is not synonymous with popularity." Specifie cases of popular instructors not being granted tenure was cited and questioned. He said that for each individual for whom students signed petitions there were also students who didn't like the individual. He also claimed that there are a many cases of popular individuals getting tenure as there are individual not getting tenure.
