Importance of internships emphasized at forum

By Michelle Hesler

Speakers emphasized the importance of internships and encouraged students to take advantage of opportunities to gain valuable work experience. According to Frank, it is crucial for students to "think about what you want to do before you graduate and plan your coursework accordingly."

In terms of finding internships, speakers noted that networking is key. They encouraged students to reach out to professors, alumni, and professionals in their desired field to learn more about potential internship opportunities.

Overall, the forum reinforced the importance of internships in preparing students for the job market and highlighted the diverse range of career paths available to SUNY Albany students.

The editor of the independent Student Association has proposed that a mandatory graduate student activities fee be levied on graduate students, who do not pay an activities fee, in order to increase revenues. The Student Association is currently levied only to increase or create revenue. Seldom ever has the limited revenues the Student Association currently brings in been used to benefit graduate students. Unfortunately, the Student Association has not been able to benefit graduate students, who are full-time students, in a substantial manner.

The Student Association is levied by the University to benefit the graduate and undergraduate students, though I would contend that the Student Association is not an equitable body. The University has the audacity to let one group of people decide the issue. Both graduates and undergraduates would vote on the issue and the University has the audacity to let one group of people decide the issue. Both graduates and undergraduates would vote on the issue.

C'est Moi

Okay, okay, let's put this thing to bed and then get out of here and put myself to bed. I'm sitting in front of a computer screen, staring blankly into it and every few minutes, I need to tug out and come back to my own minutes later thinking Tilt! Tilt! Tilt at one o'clock.

Here's the second last letter to me. This, on the other hand, is my ninth essay for Aspects.

Am I in a shape? I'm feeling a little proud of myself. What, John Keenan proud? Can't be, but there is a reason, because in sake of the numerous injuries which seem to be becoming my treatment, and despite the fact that I have to make a long apology to my professor a mere three hours from now, and explain why I'm as far behind in my course, I've put together what right now seems to be the best essay I've ever written. I'm doing good, dammit. My parents will be getting this paper in the mail. They'll read that I'm behind in my classes and call my suite to tell me to get my ass in gear. I'm getting it together.

That's the law of this paper, though. It makes it so easy to revolutionize not keeping up in your classes. It makes it almost okay to not keep up in your classes, because after all, if I want to be a journalist, that is giving me just as much experience as any class would.

But - when all's said and done - it's not the reason I'm in school. Every so often I remind myself of that.

Hart Wins New Hampshire

A woman I met at a primary rally for Gary Hart in New Hampshire told me that at a local kitchencome where she lives, the owner conducted a poll by having his customers write on a matchbook cover the candidate for which they would vote on primary day. According to the poll, she said, Gary Hart would be the winner of Tuesday's Democratic primary.

The poll must have been more accurate than the official polls that showed, until just two days before the primary, that Walter Mondale would come out ahead. In fact, just a few days after everyone thought that this would be a one man race.

However, Colorado Senator Gary Hart's unexpected victory over former Vice President Walter Mondale in the Democratic Presidential primary on February 25th changed all that. And through the victory was unexpected, political analysts have been telling us for quite some time now that the unexpected is what we should expect from voters within the small, conservative state. New Hampshire has a political history of reversing the trends by supporting underdogs instead of front-runners. Also important is the fact that since 1962, no one, however won the presidential election without first winning his party's primary in New Hampshire.

What was even more unexpected was the overwhelming margin by which Hart won the race. He carried more than 75 cities and towns, winning by 11,000 (or 13 percent) more votes than Mondale. Hart led with a total of 41 percent of the vote. Mondale finished second with 28 percent, and Senator John Glenn trailed with a disappointing 12 percent.

None of the other five candidates received more than six percent of the vote. President Reagan won more than six percent just in write-ins on the Democratic ballot. Virtually unopposed in his own party's primary, Reagan took 97 percent of the vote.

Portraying himself as the candidate of the "new generation" leaders, Hart took both half of the votes of the youngest age group, those under thirty years of age. But he was the political independents, making up more than a third of the voters Tuesday, that really determined the winner. A New York Times/CBS News poll showed that although Hart and Mondale received the same number of votes among Democrats, the Colorado Senator received twice as many votes from Independents as Mondale did.

Mondale also apparently lost votes due to his close ties to organized labor. About half the Democratic voters picked Tuesday to official polls Monday on that issue.

For some of the other candidates, results on primary day presented a question of whether or not their first primary would be their last. Both California Senator Alan Cranston and South Carolinas Senator Ernest Hollings dropped out of the new Wednesday, after receiving two and four percent of the vote, respectively. Rhode Island held the other six primary candidates with just one percent of the vote, and said that he would declare next week whether or not he would continue his campaign.

Both the Reverend Jesse Jackson and former Senator George McGovern received six percent of the vote, and McGovern said that the results of the Massachusetts primary on March 13th will determine whether or not he will continue his campaign. Massachusetts voters strongly supported McGovern in the 1972 presidential election, and a win in New Hampshire would have been vital.

Ohio Senator John Glenn conceded disappointment, receiving twelve percent of the vote in New Hampshire after trailing in third place in the Iowa caucuses just eight days earlier. Glenn indicated, though, that Hart would not do well in the South, where several primaries are scheduled March 13th.

Although Hart praised all of his money and organizational resources into New Hampshire, he is confident that he can carry the state. He is now facing a challenge in the March 13th primaries.

Ohio Senator John Glenn conceded disappointment, receiving twelve percent of the vote in New Hampshire after trailing in third place in the Iowa caucuses just eight days earlier. Glenn indicated, though, that Hart would not do well in the South, where several primaries are scheduled March 13th.

Although Hart praised all of his money and organizational resources into New Hampshire, he is confident that he can carry the state. He is now facing a challenge in the March 13th primaries.

Schools ponder question of program ownership

WASHINGTON, D.C., March 1 — Program ownership is a growing issue for American higher education institutions, as the debate over the rights and responsibilities of universities and corporations in the development and marketing of educational software continues.

The issue has been brought to the forefront by the recent formation of the National Center for Educational Software, a nonprofit organization established to promote the development and use of educational software.

"We're concerned about the escalating costs of educational software and the lack of control that universities have over their courseware," said John Smith, director of the center. "We believe that program ownership should be a shared responsibility between universities and corporations."

The center has been working with representatives from universities and corporations to develop a model for program ownership that balances the interests of both parties.

"The model we've developed recognizes that universities have a vested interest in the quality and effectiveness of their courseware," said Smith. "But it also acknowledges that corporations have a right to profit from their investments in educational software."

The center's model includes provisions for
- shared ownership of courseware,
- a mechanism for sharing the costs of development and marketing,
- a process for resolving disputes over ownership and usage rights.

"Our goal is to create a framework that allows universities and corporations to work together in a mutually beneficial relationship," said Smith. "We believe that this model will help to ensure the long-term viability of educational software and the continued success of higher education institutions."

The center is currently working with several universities and corporations to implement the model on a campus-by-campus basis.

"We're encouraged by the interest and support we've received," said Smith. "We believe that the model we've developed is a step forward in addressing the issue of program ownership in higher education."

The center is also working with the American Council on Education to develop a comprehensive policy on program ownership that can be adopted by institutions across the country.

"We're committed to working with the ACE and other organizations to develop a policy that will be effective and fair," said Smith. "We believe that this policy will be a major step forward in addressing the issue of program ownership in higher education."

Albany women gymnasts fifth in States; Armstrong and Bailey top performers

By John P. Parker

For a Division III school like the Albany State University women's gymnastics team, a fifth-place finish in a national championship is not something that happens on a daily basis. Yet that is exactly what happened when the team competed at the Eastern Conference Championships at the Meadowlands Complex in New Jersey last weekend.

The Eastern Conference Championships, which are held annually, bring together the best gymnasts from the Eastern United States. The Albany State University women's gymnastics team competed in the vault, bars, and floor exercises, with Jennifer Cleary on the day being registered by Virginia Lockman in the vault, Anne Armstrong and Bailey top performers. Other fine performances on the day were recorded by sophomore Brenda Armstrong and Bailey, who scored a 7.85 in the event. The Danes compiled a total score of 50.50, which was enough to place them fifth in the competition.

The only event in which the team didn't record the team-high score was the balance beam. The Danes' top performers in the event were Jennifer Cleary, who scored a 7.85, and Virginia Lockman, who scored a 7.80. The team's overall score in the balance beam was 49.50.

Albany State University's performance in the Eastern Conference Championships was a significant achievement for the team. The Danes had to be sophomore Brenda Armstrong and Bailey, who scored a 7.85 in the event, to place Albany higher in the rankings. The team's overall score in the event was 50.50.

Albany State University's performance in the Eastern Conference Championships is a testament to the hard work and dedication of the team. The Danes have been working hard throughout the season to improve their performance and are now looking forward to the upcoming season. The team is eager to continue to improve and to compete at higher levels in the future.

Women cagers host Nazareth in ECAC opener

By Keith Meadors

The Albany State Great Danes have a 35-5 record, 10th in the nation in the preseason coaches' poll. The team is led by 6 foot 3 inch center Marly Young, who is averaging 13 points and 10 rebounds per game. Young is a key player for the Danes, who have won the ECAC championship the past two years.

The Danes will meet the Nazareth Golden Flyers in the first round of the ECAC tournament. Nazareth is led by guard Teressa Hylton, who is averaging 15 points and 8 rebounds per game. The Flyers have a strong defense, holding opponents to an average of 58 points per game.

Albany is coming off a 78-55 win over Oneonta, while Nazareth is 0-3 in its last three games. The Danes are favored by 15 points in the game.

The game will be played at the Times Union Center in Albany on Friday, March 2, at 7 p.m. The winner will advance to the ECAC championship game on Saturday, March 3, at 7 p.m.

Danes lose to Binghamton in ECACs, 46-44

By Keith Meadors

The Albany State Great Danes lost to the Binghamton Bearcats in the first round of the ECAC tournament, 46-44. The Danes were led by guard Teressa Hylton, who scored a game-high 18 points.

Albany was led by center Marly Young, who scored 12 points and 11 rebounds. However, Binghamton had a strong defense, holding the Danes to 35 points in the game.

The Bearcats were led by guard Kayla Hopkins, who scored 14 points and 7 rebounds. Binghamton was able to limit the Danes to 2-10 shooting from the three-point line.

The Danes will now have a chance to advance to the ECAC championship game by beating the University of Rochester in a consolation game.

Students rally at SUNYA

Gather in support of 'Bill of Rights'

By Christine Person

Students at the State University of New York at Albany gathered on the campus on Tuesday to protest the Supreme Court's decision in the case of University of Virginia v. Extraordinary Chambers in the Case of Petitioners from the Democratic Republic of Congo.

The students were protesting the court's decision, which they认为 was a setback for equal rights and education. They were joined by faculty and staff members, who also spoke out against the decision.

The protest was organized by the SUNYA Student Association and the SUNYA Faculty Senate. The students called for the university to take action to support the rights of marginalized groups.

Students in the SUNYA System have been calling for action on a number of issues, including the treatment of international students and the lack of funding for research programs.

Olympic hopes aided by students

By Keith Meadors

Students at the State University of New York at Albany have been working hard to help the Olympic team prepare for the upcoming Games. The students have been providing support in a number of ways, including by helping to organize events and by providing financial assistance.

One student, who is a member of the Olympic team, said that the support from the students has been "invaluable." The student added that the students have "gone above and beyond" to help.

The students have also been working to raise funds for the Olympic team. They have organized a number of events, including a bake sale and a movie night.

Other events scheduled for April 29 include a free pancake breakfast for all students at the SUNYA Campus Center. The breakfast will be held in the Campus Center Dining Hall from 7:30-10 a.m. The event is open to all students, faculty, and staff members.

The money raised from these events will be used to support the Olympic team. The students have also been working to raise funds by selling Olympic-themed T-shirts and other merchandise.

According to Student Senate President Doug Jones, the money raised from these events will be used to support the Olympic team. Jones said that the students "are doing everything they can to support our athletes."
