ON STUDENT DEMOCRACY

Student democracy at State College last week came in for another quarrel of praise from visiting educators. Two members of the teacher training faculty of New York City schools remarked at the extent that student enterprises here flourished without faculty supervision.

This spirit of responsibility of students for their own activities has doubled the authority of the student government. It takes years for it to develop, but at the same time, this spirit must grow from some discernible beginning.

We believe that one must provide some way of the source of the spirit of student responsibility when he declared that it must be a real and sincere desire of the students to be of the students. We believe that Dr. Bushey is largely responsible for the placing of responsibilities in student hands.

Since his admission to the staff, the student responsibilities have grown to a great extent. Since he came here, the visiting student government teachers at State College, under the guidance of Edith T. Lawrence, and Miss Shirley Wood, have been creating, hand by hand, the influence of the efforts of students awakened to their responsibilities.

In assuming these duties, students have also assumed a trust. They are staking on this trust the great dignity and sincerity of purpose. Dr. Bushey and his associates should have assured them for the preservation of a "fancy fate" policy, advised with regard to this spirit of student responsibility.

The State College News, the State Lion, Pi Gamma Mu, Kappa Phi Kappa, Alpha Phi Gamma and a host of students have been created, hand by hand, through the efforts of students awakened to their responsibilities and their responsibilities and their responsibilities and their responsibilities and their responsibilities and their responsibilities.
